

Go Light — Clothes, That Is

LONDON — The "weight" of being fashionable is a lot heavier than it used to be in grandmother's day. In the Edwardian days, a light-weight summer outfit for a woman weighed more than seven pounds. Now it's just slightly heavier than one pound.

These figures come from Doris Langley Moore, one of the best-known historians on women's styles through the ages. She gives these contracts:

1902: Dress and two petticoats four pounds seven ounces in 1902, 1912: combinations and chemise, 6½ ounces, slip and garter, 1½ ounces; corset with 40 bones, one pound two ounces, roll-ons, two ounces; shoes and stockings, one pound and 4½ ounces.

Dancing Orphans of West

SIXTY square-dancing orphans from the Calumet have won themselves a spot among Canada's top entertainers.

The group, called the "Do-Si-Do" and led by the family of Mike Hussey, "Do-so-do" they go. All are from the Lacombe Home at the Lacombe Home, outside the city.

The Do-Si-Do's have shot to their own locality. Since their appearance at the Stampede in 1951, they have been in demand for private parties at banquets, concerts and similar functions.

Their greatest triumph to date was their performance before Queen Elizabeth and the Duke of Edinburgh during the royal tour last year.

The Do-Si-Do's are the brain child of Mike Hussey and Bourque of Calgary. In Bourque, then an executive of the Canadian Shoe Retailers' Association, was asked to bring a western train for a group in Montreal.

The delegates dressed western and learned to square dance in Montreal. When they returned home, they were met by Mike Hussey, a veteran dancer, who decided to teach the children.

With a shortage of teachers, they turned to the Christian Home, where about 30 willing recruits were found. Hussey then decided to raise money for the group through public appearances.

Following the ceremonies a reception was held at Valhalla Hall, where the bride's mother, gowned in turquoise with pink accessories, received the guests.

Mrs. McManus, mother of the groom, attired in navy blue nylon with white accessories assisted in receiving the guests.

The couple will leave by train this evening for Alberta and Saskatchewan where they will spend their honeymoon.
