

Co-operative Home for Elderly Women Proves Successful

TORONTO — An experiment in co-operative living for old persons undertaken in January, at Hill House has been so successful that its sponsor, the Julia Greenfields Memorial Home, plans to open a second such home.

Mrs. G. F. Boyer, president of the home's board of management, told the annual meeting recently that the new home already has a waiting list of elderly women. Further, the church of England in Canada is impressed by the results achieved at Hill House that it plans to sponsor similar homes in a diocesan project.

Hill House was undertaken to test the theory of its founders that single women of limited means can live together economically and happily on a co-operative basis, sharing both the expenses for the upkeep and the cooking and other household duties.

"We started with 10 ladies and but one of the original is still in the home," said Mrs. Boyer. Two of the ladies look after the cooking each week which means that each one's turn comes every two weeks."

MODERATE RENTALS
Each guest pays $25 a month for her room except for two rooms on the top floor which are rented at $20. In addition each contributes $5 weekly to the general purse for food.

Mrs. Boyer said the women are permitted complete freedom of movement and the home is merely a residence, not a supervised institution. They take part in outside activities and each has her own key. They have separate rooms, but share the well-furnished sitting room and the dining room and garden.

In addition the women of Hill House are permitted to entertain their friends at tea and may also have guests for dinner for a charge of only 25 cents. The average cost for board and room for each resident is about $50 monthly.

Mrs. Boyer said that when Hill House was opened it was felt that it could well be the forerunner of similar establishments, based on the principle that elderly persons capable of functioning independently should not be put in institutions. It was hoped, she said, that the success of Hill House would establish a pattern which will be followed not only by the Julia Greenfields Foundation but by other organizations as well.

250 Visit Dental Clinic

Figures given out officially at the regular meeting of the Prince Rupert Preventive Dental Clinic told of success of the scheme to date.

Pupils of Grade One, from Borden Street, Conrad, Annunciation and King Edward schools, are taken each Wednesday forenoon to the dentists' offices and examined and given necessary attention. More than 80 children have had their teeth treated, and as some have visited the dentists three or four times, more than 250 visits have been made.

Care of pre-school six-year-old children is to follow.

Included among recent donations was a cheque from the Women's Auxiliary of the Canadian Legion. A few other organizations have yet to forward their promised donations.

A letter of congratulation from the Unit Board of Health on the organization of the local clinic was read. Co-operation of parents in supplying transportation for the children from the schools to the dental offices and the help given by parents in escorting the children to and from the clinic was "greatly appreciated."

Those present at the meeting were John S. Wilson, chairman; Frank Derry, secretary-treasurer; Mesdames L. M. Greene, S. Anderson, A. Bussanich, A. Halliday, E. Becker, W. Bowes, J. Bowman and Dr. Duncan Black and Dr. Munthe.

Terrace Guides Hold Mother-Daughter Day

Special to the Daily News
TERRACE.—A Mother and Daughter banquet sponsored by the Guides was held Thursday at the Credit Union Hall.

The Guides entertained their mothers. Each guide introduced her mother to the group and presented her with a corsage, after which a lovely supper was enjoyed.

The toast to the Queen was proposed by Guide Joan Gaven.

The toast to the mothers was proposed by Guide Barbara Hagen, and was fittingly replied to by Mrs. A. J. McColl.

BECKBURY, England (CP)—Lt.-Col. Byford Jones told a meeting in this Shropshire town that ridicule is ruining the Home Guard. His appeal that radio comedians be asked to avoid "malicious humor" concerning the organization was backed by Home Guard commanders.

Kissing Couple Irks Neighbors

SLOUGH, England (CP)—Neighbors got up a petition to stop a young couple in this Buckinghamshire town from kissing good-night over the garden gate.

The petition asks that a home be found for Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Poole so they won't have to say good-night at the gate.

For the four years of their married life, both have been living with their respective parents because they cannot find a house of their own. They have two children.

The petition has been referred to the local council by Fenner Brockway, a Labor member of parliament.
