

Warm Personality, Superb Playing Win Attention For Violinist Frances Magnes

Finest musical event of season to date was last violin concert by the Frances Magnes whose art and vivacity in both melody and playing won her a warm response from the audience.

She was like no other artist heard. She swept through the program with flying colors. Then, while receiving congratulations on her performance at the reception following the concert, she counted praise by proudly passing snapshots of her month-old baby boy, back in New York, and Jebat, her brother he looks like her.

At the concert, Miss Magnes showed impeccable technique with full-sounding but complete control. Her bowing, light as a feather or thrillingly powerful, drew beautiful music from her fine instrument. The concert was passionate, dramatic and with which she won the audience. Tzigane means "gypsy" and the music was all played by Miss Magnes. Heard it played before, but like this. Ravel himself would have been delighted.

completely satisfying as was the moving Romanza Andaluza by Sarasate. In a different mood were Brahms' Hungarian Dances, particularly the popular No. 6, in which she again gave full scope to drama and emotion.

RHYTHMIC RENDITION
Sarasate's "Zapataedo" was new to us, but will be a favorite in future after her exciting, rhythmic rendition.

The work of the accompanist also drew rave notice from the audience. David Garvey, who has worked with Miss Magnes for the last four years and whom she considers a partner, rather than an accompanist, was outstanding. The demands on him were heavy, but he met them with aplomb throughout. In Zapataedo these years of working together showed up through perfect timing, and in the allegro vivace movement of the Beethoven Sonata, Mr. Garvey nearly stole the show from the artist.

I suppose there were flaws in the performance, as there always are. But, if so, they were ignored by a completely absorbed audience.

During the intermission, R. C. Telford, chairman of the Alaska Music Trail Auxiliary which brings the concert series here, outlined the financial position of the organization and asked for suggestions for next year's series.

He estimated that some $2,050 was required to finance the four concerts this season, and said that, with one more concert to go, revenue to date was only about $1,450.

At the reception following the concert, refreshments were served by Wrens of HMCS Chatham.

Artists Musicales

Local artists enjoyed a night at the home of Mrs. Thompson, 1426 Piggott Street, entertaining one another with their various talents.

Those participating were Patricia Wicks, coloratura soprano, who sang "Il Bacio" and "Espagnole." Altered pianist, who played several compositions, and Mrs. J. Sandboss, who sang about a year ago from Mr. Sandboss, a pianist, played Bach Preludes and Fugues while Mrs. Sandboss, soprano, sang several songs in Italian and German.

Hadland, a violinist, Fritz Kreisler compositions warmly received as was a ballet dancer. Mrs. Sandboss also took part, playing Chopin works and concluding with Beethoven's beautiful Sonata.

The evening wound up with the singing with refreshments.
