BLACKWOOD on Bridge

By EASLEY BLACKWOOD

Right Play, Rightly Timed,
Can Be Devastating to Foe

The element of time is the very essence of bridge. Time determines the beautiful "balance" of the game as between offensive and defensive sides. It is not enough, usually, to execute the right play. But if the right play is executed at the right time—the result is devastating to the opposition.

In today's hand, Mr. Dale led the six of spades. Dummy's queen was put up and it held. Mr. Abel playing the deuce. Considering the importance of the time factor, what would you lead at trick two?

Mr. Muzzy led a small club to the ace, returned a club and finessed dummy's jack. Mr. Abel won with the queen and led back the eight of spades. This was ducked around to the king and another spade lead cleared the suit.

Since Mr. Muzzy had to get at least two heart tricks for his contract, he had to let Mr. Dale in once more and the cashing of the good spades brought the total of the defenders' tricks to five.

Mr. Muzzy led clubs at trick two because he had more clubs than anything else. But that was of practically no importance. The important thing in this hand was to try to make sure the lead was surrendered to the "right" opponent—the opponent who could not lead another spade without giving Mr. Muzzy a trick with the jack of that suit.

True, if the club finesse were successful, nine tricks could be garnered without losing the lead at all. But there was no hurry about cashing out the clubs. If the queen were right, the finesse would work later in the hand just as well as at trick three.

Mr. Muzzy should have led a small heart from the board at trick two and finessed the jack. Hearts was the only suit in which Mr. Dale could have a second round winner, outside of the spade suit. After winning with the king of hearts, Mr. Dale could have made no effective return.

A diamond would be as good
