Conquer Cancer

THIS MONTH the Conquer Cancer Campaign is underway across Canada.

The B.C. objective is set at $200,000. Prince Rupert's is $2,000.

As new methods prompt an increasing number of those afflicted to seek expert help, this money is desperately needed to enable the B.C. Cancer Foundation to erect a new boarding home for patients taking treatment at the B.C. Cancer Institute in Vancouver.

It is needed also to further the three-fold program of the Canadian Cancer Society's B.C. division, the aims of which are—research into the cause and cures of cancer, welfare for needy cancer patients in B.C., and an educational program to alert B.C. citizens to cancer symptoms.

"The Cancer Foundation and Society in British Columbia depend entirely on the generosity of people in this province to carry through their plans," W. H. Malkin, provincial campaign chairman points out. "I would like to remind our citizens that cancer can strike anyone. But fortunately each one of us, through our time or our money, can strike back at cancer."

Most of us are sufficiently aware of the merciless quality of this disease to need little persuasion in helping to fight it. For the size and urgency of the cause, the amount being asked is small. When the one-night drive in this city comes due, let us help to the best and most generous of our ability.

Kissing Hands

CRTHODOX members of the Hungarian communist party may in future only kiss a lady's hand if she is elderly, according to the Hungarian Youth movement newspaper, Szabad Ifjusang. The continental handkiss, says the newspaper, is otherwise superfluous.

There are hidden dangers in this edict. Who's to decide when a lady has reached an age that entitles her to a handkiss? No man should be expected to trust his judgment in such an important matter. He might bow his head preparatory to planting the kiss and receive, instead of a gracious smile, a ringing box on the ears. Indeed, the newspaper shows a curious lack of gallantry, for, as it should know, there are no individual "elderly" ladies.

JN Disarmament Committee May Establish New Sub-Group

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y.—The United Nations disarmament commission is expected to agree unanimously to set up a small sub-group for private talks at once on arms reduction and atomic control.

Diplomatic circles express belief that the sub-committee will consist of the United States, Russia, Britain, France and possibly Canada. Some countries are understood to favor inclusion of Canada because of her close connection with Britain and U.S. atomic production.

Friday's meeting of the 12-country commission was its first in eight months. Its only session last year, in August, was devoted to approval of a report of no progress.

Before the delegates is a plea from India for immediate consideration of a four-point program outlined by prime minister

H Bomb Bunk

A GOOD many letters are coming in these days about the H bomb.

Some of these are from people who are genuinely concerned about the fate of mankind, in the face of the titanic armament race, now speeding up. But others, I am sorry to say, come from people who have swallowed the Communist propaganda hook, line and sinker.

These usually urge an immediate cessation of H bomb tests, and later an international agreement to "ban the bombs."

This program is so plain, downright silly that I am astonished that anyone in his right senses should seriously suggest it.

* * *

LET US consider for a moment what would happen if the Communist world propaganda line won out, and the great powers did agree effectively never to use atom bombs, or hydrogen bombs, or the rumoured nitrogen bombs, in any future warfare.

The practical consequence of that decision would be to enable the Russian army to sweep West over all Europe, the middle East, and down into Africa whenever it felt like it. It would also enable Red China to grab off such neighboring territories as South Korea, Hong Kong, Indo-China, Siam and Burma.

China is only prevented from open, direct, all-out military intervention in those areas now because her rulers know that she could not undertake such action without bringing all-out war to the world in general, and to China in particular.

* * *

I DO NOT agree with the British professor Blackett who reasons that as both the U.S.A. and Russia have enough H bombs to blast each other's big cities right off the map, that therefore the H bombs have cancelled each other out, and will never be used.

That Blackett theory has even been stretched to the point of reasoning that as the H bombs have cancelled each other out that Russia may be in a position to resume local aggressions, such as the one attempted in Korea—but with improved techniques for such local aggression.

This theory is insane, and obscene. The only real choice is between total international peace and no international peace; between a genuine agreement which will enable UN to start building real world law, or total war, which may well annihilate half or more of mankind.

* * *

SUPPOSE THAT in the days of knights on horseback some reformer or idealist had been converted to the iniquity of war, and had suggested shorter swords, or spears, or less deadly bows-and-arrows? Would that have struck at the real evil?

The only real choice for our generation is one world or none—between total war, or no war.

In the last analysis between peace based on and enforced by law, or annihilation which springs from refusal to make and accept world law.

OTTAWA DIARY

Now that rank-and-file M.P.'s have digested the latest Abbott budget they have drawn the somewhat gloomy moral that just so long the general public has plenty of money in its pockets, it might as well resign itself to paying high taxes.

In other words, definitely are being reserved for depression times. Their purpose then will stimulate business by bringing about lower prices which will serve as an incentive to consumer purchases.

The old days—back in the times of Robt. White, Fielding—a Finance Minister used to budget simply from year to year. He wasn't too concerned with economic conditions, for the reason that the current elaborate theories of the relationship between budgetary policy and the general economy hadn't yet been born. His aim was to keep taxes as low as possible and to keep government bureaucracies mindful of the fact that they were the servants and not the masters of the people.

Today things are different. This is the era of the economic expert in government, with Parliament existing mainly as the administrative agency to carry out the policies which his wisdom devises. Instead of currency being geared to the actual needs of the transactions of trade, its volume is regulated in accordance with intricate theories of monetary policy laid down by the Bank of Canada. And instead of the dollars staying in the packets in which normal economic processes place them, they are redistributed by a whole series of transfer payments such as family allowances, old age pensions, and various producer subsidies. Since industry views most of these payments as an added cost and grades up its prices to covet the dollar always has in it a substantial element of inflation for which all consumers have to pay, with the burden falling, as always, most heavily upon those least able to bear it.

LETTING HIM KNOW

There was a dense fog and the junior officer on the ship's bridge was becoming more and more rattled. As he stared ahead trying to pierce the gloom he saw a dim figure leaning over the rail some yards from the ship's prow. "What do you think you're doing with your ship?" he snarled. "Don't you know the elementary rules of seamanship?"

"This ain't no ship," came the reply, "this is a lighthouse."

Ray Reflects and Reminiscences

By 45 you've realized you'll never be the man you once hoped you might be comments a Vancouver press contemporary. But, you've learned to accept yourself for what you are. And while you continue to set your sights high, you aren't ridden with so many guilt complexes. You wouldn't be young again if you could. Nature knows what she's doing. And aging has its compensations. What you've missed on the swings, you get on the roundabouts.

Hard to believe, yet it appears to be a fact. There are Russian farmers, but they possess no land. That is the property of the Soviet. When Ivan actually does farm, he is told when, what and how to do it. Very few have a horse or cow. A beefsteak, or practically any kind of meat is unknown. Black bread is a staple. How to have butter has not yet been discovered.

"But to stand an' be still to the Birkenhead drill is a damn tough bullet to chew." So wrote Rudyard Kipling long ago and it's well remembered yet. Every now and then, the sea tells another drama. The loss of the Birkenhead, in 1852 off Cape Town was one. The Titanic was another.

OMINOUS BUT LIFE

And yet another was the burning and sinking of the troopship Empire Windrush off Algiers a few weeks ago. Abandonment was conducted in a calm and orderly way. There were 1,286 of the navy, 125 women and 87 children. Four of crew died in a boiler explosion. Throughout, there was rigid discipline on the decks, under ominous clouds of smoke.

What about that $312 of Mortimore's you have in your bank?" he probably asked.

I must reply by the next mail. I wouldn't want that bank to get in trouble. I'll leave the money in the account, just to help the bank along.

A man who can forget money can forget anything. I have a young son. Some day I might receive a letter from a nursery or boarding school, as follows:

"Dear Sir:

"It may have escaped your notice that you left a small boy in our keeping. Food has been supplied to him regularly. According to our last calculations on February 27, 1953, he is credited with a height of two and one half feet and a weight of 30 pounds.

"We have no wish to disturb your account in any way. Indeed, we would like you to make greater use of our services."

"I was flattered, but slightly annoyed with myself for forgetting such a small amount. It would have been a far more pleasant surprise if I had managed to forget $3,120, or $312,000.

"Nevertheless, it was touching to think that a big institution like a bank was tenderly caring for my neglected $312, and ministering to all its little needs.

"It is . . . a requirement of the Canadian Bank Act that we report accounts in which no transaction has taken place for a specified period . . ."

"So that was how the land lay. A government bank examiner had been raising a fuss.

"The little boy is currently employed as a night shift janitor."
