SIGHTING THE BROOM

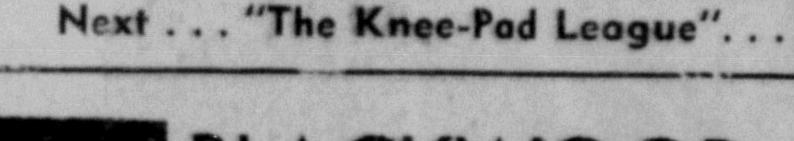

Set your sights on the broom and keep them there until your stone is well on its way. Keep your eyes glued to your target all the way through the motions of the backswing, forward swing and the follow-through. Any flicker of the eyes, any momentary diversion, no matter how fleeting, will affect the direction of your stone. Forget the rock you are shooting at. Block it out of your mind entirely. Concentrate on one thing and one thing only-your skip's broom.

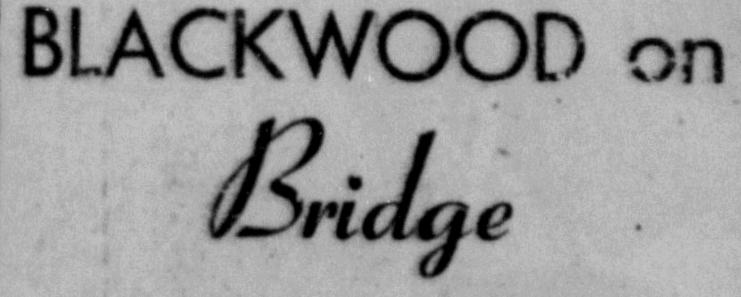

Only two things will cause you to miss the broom (outside of twisting the handle or pushing the stone at the end of delivery): (1) When the start of your backswing is off line.

(2) When you take your eye off the broom during or particularly just before you release your stone. Time and again when I had missed the broom, I found that I was looking at an opposing stone that I was trying to remove instead of at the broom. Invariably I was narrow. The closer the score, the tougher and the more important the match, when you get set in the hack, say this over once to yourself-"I must concentrate on the broom." And the faster the shot you are playing, the more important the admonition becomes.

Actually, under stress of competition, young curlers are apt to get jumpy and cannot resist the impulse to throw a fast one -to get it over with. A miss by you or one of your men (if you are up a few points), and the panic is on. In the last two years, two Manitoba high school championships were literally thrown away, by such "hit and run" methods.

It is easier and safer to play normal "take-out" weight. Set your sights on the broom and settle down to a quiet, unhurried swing. As the stone leaves your hand, reach out after it and point your fingers, all of them, straight at the broom. Then, and only then, you can say to yourself, "I am on the broom."

BY EASLEY BLACKWOUD Fake Bid Not Unethical

South dealer

Neither side vulnerable

When Players Have No Plan Many of the letters I receive from readers contain questions referring to the ethics of the game. Clearly, there is much misunderstanding as to just what constitutes unethical play.* When a player hesitates for a long time before playing to a trick, when holding a singleton of the suit lead; or when he makes an audible remark concerning the strength or weakness of his hand, there is no question but that he is being unethical. There are many situations, however, which are not so clear-cut. I want to do series of columns for you to try D-K Q 8 and clarify the subject. Mr. Dale's bluff bid of oney spade in today's deal may or may not have caused Mr. Masters to lead the king of diamonds against the final contract of six hearts. In any case South the diamond opening enabled 1 H Mrs. Keen to take all the tricks. After taking out trumps, she which you and I were not aware was able to discard all three of her spades on dummy's club

Mr. New didn't 'like it. "Lead Ranger's office at examination a spade, Masters," he said, "and planer a fake bid as long as the centres. Completed application forms we take the first two tricks. Inshould be forwarded to the District cidentally, what kind of a spade bid was that? I don't think it's ethical to bid a spade on three to a five spot."

Mr. Masters didn't like the result either, but he came to Mr. Dale's rescue. "You're all wrong, New," he said. "We were had, but we were had fairly. A player is entitled to make any bid he pleases as long as it has just as much chance to fool his partner as it has to fool his oppoif it had held some private or (F2,9,16,23) secret meaning for Mrs. Keen

(Mr. Dale) 'S-532 H-K J 8 7 5 D-None (Mr. New) (Mrs. Keen) All pass

Of course, Mr. Masters was right. There is nothing wrong one who knows it's a fake.
