It's Easy To Criticize
After Hand Is Played

This hand illustrates the type of play Mr. Heinsite expects his partner to make—plays which he labels "obvious."

The deal is one of Mr. Dale's top favorites. Mr. Heinsite goes off to the only opening that would beat the contract. He led the nine of diamonds. But with a fine piece of misdirection, Mr. Dale made the hand anyway.

Mr. Abel won the first trick with the ace of diamonds. Feeling certain the nine was a singleton, Mr. Dale promptly dropped the king.

Mr. Abel then returned the five of spades and the danger of immediate defeat was avoided. However, there was still the problem of what to do with that losing eight of diamonds. Mr. Dale solved that neatly by the following play.

He ruffed the spade lead at trick two. He cashed dummy's trick of hearts and re-entered his hand by ruffing another spade. Then he ran off all of his hearts but one. At this point the situation was like this:
