Safe and Sane

ALLOWE'EN in some places is a special day that should be dropped. The citizens whose property overrun by young celebrants who are dressed like of recognition of the real government of China. monsters, and act like them as well, has cause to wonder if the name of the day was misspelled. At any rate, he is apt to think that the original man with the lique position to speak with au-nomination conventions are fail and spear had nothing on the little characters wamping through his garden.

In Prince Rupert, however, a far more kindly atjitude has been made possible. In fact Hallowe'en has become just what it is supposed to be — a night when children can enjoy themselves, and their elders.

Ean enjoy them, too.

With the mischief removed, Hallowe'en is an ocgasion that can match any other in the year for fun and pleasant memories. Children have their parents' Buthority to put on an act, and—thanks to the Prince Rupert Kinsmen Club — simultaneously attend a party. It is difficult to imagine a combination of experiences more satisfying to the youthful taste.

To organize the bonfires, treats and competitions which feature the occasion is long and exacting work. In taking it on, the Kinsmen perform a service to the city which has a value that we can only estimate in the accidents and damage which we hope never occur. So to the Kinsmen for keeping Hallowe'en safe and Prince Rupert sane, the city owes its thanks.

Waiting Room

00D doctors are busy men. Suffering people flock to them. They cannot serve everybody at monce. So they must have rooms in which their padients wait.

When they tell a patient to come at a certain hour it does not mean necessarily that they will see the patient at that hour. Experienced patients know spetter than to expect anything like that.

Since there are more patients than there are Thours in the working day no doubt the doctor has Theen forced to tell a number of patients to come at the same hour. Then, after they are assembled, he will try to do the best he can.

After all, the doctor makes things comfortable for his patients in the waiting room. He provides easy chairs in which they may sit and adequate lighting and sometimes air conditioning.

He will have hung the walls of the waiting room with interesting engravings of ancient cathedrals and Roman ruins and other like illustrations of a restful and educational nature.

He will have provided also ample reading material in the form of magazines and newspapers. No doubt the doctor's office is the only place where a patient sees some of the magazines. So while he is waiting he will be afforded an opportunity to catch up on his reading.

It is quite possible that in one of the magazines he will find an appealing article or story and become absorbed in it. The article or story may be fairly long. So, before he gets to the end it is quite possible that he will be told it is his turn to see the doctor.

Now what would the doctor say if the patient were to send word to him that he is in the middle of an interesting article and will the doctor kindly wait until he gets through?
