Thinking Picks Off Foe's Singleton King

In order to make today's contract Mr. Masters realized he had to keep Mr. Muzzy out of the lead. local representative, refused to The opening lead was the four of spades and the ace in the closed hand killed Mr. Muzzy's king.

It appeared that Mrs. Keen had led her fourth highest spade and since the trey and deuce were showing in dummy it also appeared that she had exactly four cards in the suit.

There was little doubt that she | ... had the queen, and probably the ten as well, so that a spade lead from Mr. Muzzy's side of the table might be fatal to the con-

On the other hand, a spade lead from Mrs. Keen would give Mr. Masters another trick in the | Suit. Of course, If Mr. Muzzy had the ace of hearts there! would be no way to shut him out. But if he did not have that card, it was possible that he could be kept out of the lead-even if he held the king of clubs. At trick two Mr. Masters led a small diamond; intending to win with dummy's king and finesse the jack on the way back. But as you see, Mrs. Keen's queen showed up at once and the whole suit was set up.

However, he still had only cight sure tricks and even that count was based on Mrs. Keen's' having tho ace of hearts.

At this point Mr. Masters gave some thought to Mrs. Keen's distribution. She had chosen a spade for her opening lead. Therefore, that suit could be assumed to be her longest. Also, she had a singleton. Her distri-| bution, then, was most probably | 4-4-4-1. And if so, Mr. Muzzy held a singleton club.

Just in case that singleton // were the king, Mr. Masters laid down the ace of clubs at trick three. He could afford to lose ia club to Mrs. Keen, but not to Mr. Muzzy.,

"Hey," yelled Mr. Muzzy as he dropped his king under the acs. 'Quit pecking."

But Mr. Masters hadn't peck-To make this play which seemed, so sensational to Mr. Muzzy, he had not used his eyes, but his brain.
