"The Master Link"

VIHEN Sir Winston Churchill called Canada W "the master link in Anglo-American unity," he defined in an apt phrase the unique position which this country occupies in relation to the two great English-speaking Powers, says the Toronto Telegram. Bound to the United Kingdom by birth, loyalty to the throne and membership in the Commonwealth, and to the United States by neighborly friendship, Canada by the more fact of geography links the two as no other country can do.

In this special position, Canadians have an opportunity and a task. With their intimate knowledge of the péoples on both sides of the water, they carract as interpreters, using their knowledge to explain the points of view and eliminate the misunderstandings which inevitably arise. Their interpretation is not needed at the highest levels of statesmanship, for no intermediary was required when Sir Winston Churchill and Anthony Eden met with President Eisenhower and John Foster Dulles, but it is needed to correct the errors of uninformed and reckless critics, whether British or American.

The Telegram asserts that this is a task for all the people, and particularly for the press. Where there is obvious misunderstanding on one side or the other, and where mistaken statements are made by angry extremists, Canadians can set forth the facts and explain the circumstances as friends to both, without being suspected of undue prejudice. In this way, by allaying instead of stoking the fires of controversy, they can make an invaluable contribution to the friendship of the two peoples on whose unity the safety of the free world depends.

Woeful State of Humor

recent outburst in the House of Commons involving Fisheries Minister Sinclair and Davie fulton, Conservative M.P. for Kamloops, reflects the woeful state into which humor, sarcasm and invective have fallen in today's parliament. The Canadian Press dispatch described it as a "running battle of verbal barbs," but this is excessively charitable.

Here are some of the gems of repartee:

Mr. Sinclair: "Your talking would make anybody go to sleep . . . I would say that the member for Kamloops would make anybody in this house go to sleep because he loves to hear himself talk."

Mr. Fulton: "Of course, Mr. Chairman, the yoice of anyone but the minister of fisheries would hore the minister of fisheries . . ."

Mr. Fulton, after an intervention by the deputy speaker: "The minister of fisheries is asserting his claim to be prime minister rather in ad-

The current doubts stem from the frustrating immobility which labor has been evidencing dur- Affer Court Case labor has been evidencing during recent months of employment adjustments. Instead of moving to greas where jobs are available, the average employee who finds himself out of work for economic reasons merely waits for conditions to improve to the point where he will be rehired. He even is unwilling in most cases to adapt himself to another job in another industry. Above everything else, he will not take another job at lower wages.

The chief reason for his unwillingness to change over his domicile or his occupation—so Federal labor authorities are last week through her lawyers finding-is the state subsidy he that the Soviet Union had un-again, and we are crazy if we draws through unemployment lawfully confiscated the and family allowances.
