Tiny pieces of nickel speed cabled words three times taster across the Atlantic

1200 FEET DOWN, on the bottom of the Atlantic Ocean is a metal case. In it is an electronic amplifier. Electric signals weak from the long journey by cable are here amplified and reshaped into stronger, clearer signals. With this single installation the cable's capacity was increased from 30 to 167 werds a minute.

This is possible only because of the presence of tiny pieces of nickel in the ampliflor's vacuum tubo.

The first of those amplifiers was installed recently by Western Union on the company's cable which stretches under the Atlantic from Bay Roberts Newfoundland, to Penzance, England.

THE NEW UNDERSEAS CABLE "BOOSTER" being lowered to the ocean floor, where it willy amplify trans-Atlantic signals—allowing us to get messages from flutope three times faster than before. This is possible only because of the use of they pieces of nickel in the amplifier's vacuum toler.

Case Must Last For 40 Years

Nickel allays were used at vital points to guard the case containing the ampliher against the many forms of marine, chronion that occur below the ocean's surface. A life of 40 years was demanded.

For years now, communication between this Continent and the United Kingdom and Europe has been a problem. It was particularly serious during the war when communication channels were overloaded by Allied Governments, military and press.
