Paving Way For Airport.

NE of the smoothest jobs on a major issue seen around here in a long time has been that of the city airport committee in presenting its brief to the federal government.

The two delegates who made the trip to Ottawa, from which he escaped 20-J. T. Harvey and Dr. L. M. Greene, did so with a lodd years ago. thorough knowledge of their subject and a supporting case that would stand up under the closest examination. Equally important was that they went with the backing of a city which had shown sufficjent good faith to spend some money in getting professional advice to make sure this was no fool's

No one expected the delegates would exact an immediate promise that an airport would be built, and no such promise was given. But it is clear from their report that the officials they saw went far beyond the formalities which would have served i there was no intent to consider the matter further. Technicians were called in to study the brief and the impression was created generally that interest had moved safely past the principle involved and into the details.

It must be remembered, of course, that there is something more to the case than the city's conviction such an airport is necessary. Canadian Pacific Air Lines has long felt the strain of serving this district via Sandspit and is giving its full support to the proposal. It is a factor that the federal government must consider carefully, for with shipping companies evidently finding it difficult to maintain their northern passenger service the need for adequate air facilities is greater than ever.

On occasions it has been suggested that Terrace might provide such facilities, but fortunately the air now seems to be clear of this strange idea. Transport Minister Marler, in his first look at the case, immediately agreed that the intervening distance of 100 miles was too great. In the time required to make such a trip, a traveller could fly from Prince Rupert direct to Vancouver and back again. Moreover he would have greater certainty of making the flight since the minimum requirements for aircraft landings at Terrace are a 1,500-foot ceiling with threemile visibility, while those at Prince Rupert are a 600-foot ceiling with one-mile visibility.

Although the outlook is promising at this point, it is reassuring to know that the airport committee will continue to function as an active body. Its presence is necessary up to the very point when equipment moves in to start digging.

Those Who Enlist

ANADA's forces today are getting youths who, having sampled civilian life with its case, freedom, comfort, and relative safety, have deliberately chosen a sterner way.

However much conditions of service have improved, there still remain the regimentation, discipline and occasional hardship inseparable from military training.

The aspiring recruit knows this quite as well as he knows that in the Navy, Army or Air Force he will find comradeship, good food, recreational facilities and the chance for travel, adventure and advancement.

He is also aware that if trouble comes he will be in it at the risk of life and limb.

Every Canadian who fought in, over or around Korea made this choice when he walked into the recruiting office or entered a service college long before Korea became a battleground.

Strasser Danger

OTTO STRASSER has left Canada, on his way back to Germany.

That sounds innocent enough. But in his previous writings, Strasser has given a clear hint of what he intends to try to do.
