Are Canadians Too Timid?

ANADIANS may not like being called timid when it comes to risking their hard carned cash. But a special report on U.S.-Canadian investment in The Financial Post last week certainly points that way.

While American in estors have been pouring more money into oil, sad, relicered and other expand- us. ing Canadian industries v Lut have Canadians been doing? Canny Canucks have been buying back Canadian bonds and defentures held in the United States. In other words while Uncl. San. has been taking a chance and expanding his holdings, we have been using our extra each for paying off the mort-

Now with a small premium on Canadian funds instead of the 10 per cert or more discount a few years ago unquestionably it is smart for us to repatriate some of this Canadian debt held across the line. But are we carrying this sort of thing too far? The big profits made out of Canadian oil, natural gas, uranium and iron or, and other finds since the end of the war have gone or will go to U.S. investors simply because they came in with both feet, while we merely stuck in a toe. Total U.S. investment in Canada since 1349 has almost doubled, from $3.4 billions to $5.9 billions, and the great bulk of the expansion has been in those industries which are considered most speculative.

For a long time to come, unless we wish to stagnate and force our young people to emigrate in search of jobs, we are going to need foreign capital to help in Canadian development. There are simply not enough of us, especially with capital, to do the job oarselves. But some reasonable balance must be retained or we are liable to bee control over our own vital development. No self-respecting country can afford to let that happen.

--The Financial Post.

Post-Camp Manners

F THAT boy or girl of yours, having returned I from a few weeks at summer camp, seems more deferential than when he or she went away, don't WOITY.

For one thing the alarming development may soon pass. But if it doesn't it may only reflect a new appreciation for you after a period in which there have been plenty of occasions for comparing you with other adults—camp officials, visiting parents of other children, and grownups generally. All these may look somewhat different to the youngster who feels himself abroad in the world more or less on his own for the first time.

One of the sometimes unsuspected facts of life which young folks learn when in organized societies outside the home circle is that the things that irritate parents irritate other people too. Then the question has to be faced by the young person whether it is that his parents are so irritable, or that he is so irritating!

Of course the manifestations of youthful politeness which may perpact parents on these first reunions become less puzzling as camp time comes and goes over the years. And they mark periods which parents enjoy and for which they usually give the children all the credit.

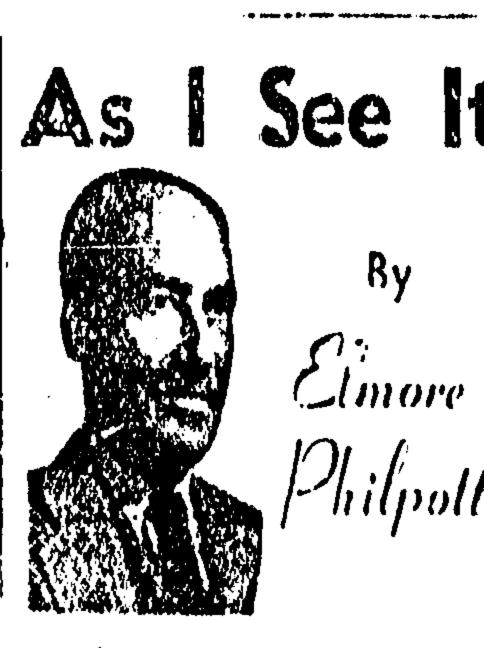

But couldn't it be that the parents themselves contribute to the evanescent atmosphere, being perhaps on slightly better than usual behavior them---- Christian Science Monitor. selves"
