RCMP discover no clues to back man's confession

An RCMP search crew have returned to this northeastern British Columbia city with no clues to substantiate the confession of Lenard Lacasse, who has told police he killed two men Aug. 18 The four-men crew searched 80, miles of mountainous country in the area in which Lacasse says he killed an Indian and a new Canadian after they allegedly tried to hold him up. Lacasse, who confessed to police in Kamloops, two weeks ago, said he killed the men at the

At the contract of four spades the handling of the trump suit presented a tricky problem. Mr. Abel won the first trick with the king of hearts. In spite of the fact that his partner played the discouraging deuce, he continued with the queen of the suit. Mrs. Keen considered discarding a diamand here in order to preserve her trump length. If the enemy then persisted with another heart lead, it could be ruffed in dummy.

But the danger a shift to diafenders had six trumps between them and the most likely division was Mrs. Keen 4-2.

Leading out four rounds of spades to clear the suit was unthinkable because on winning the fourth spade the enemy would cash whatever hearts they had left,

The fact remained that the clubs would not be run until the trump situation had been cleared up. Mrs. Keen solved problem neatly. At trick three she simply led the trey of spades.
