ELLIOTT SETS 3:45 MINUTES AS LIKELY LIMIT FOR MILE LONDON (M-Herb Elliott, the world's fastest mile runner,

Saturday listed a time of 3:45 as the probable limit of human speed for the mile. But he added:

"No man must set a limit on his capabilities. Nobody must be limited by what's around him."

Elliott, a sun-tanned, 20-year-old Australian, ran an incredible 3:54.5 mile in Dublin 11 days ago. Four runners surpassed the accepted world record of 3:58 and five shattered the once-formidable four-minute barrier in that race.

Elliott once was described by a rival as an "animal" who followed strange training routines, didn't talk to anyone and didn't know or care who he was racing.
