

U.S. Middle East Plan May Spell End For Dulles

WASHINGTON (CP)—President Dulles has been subjected to Eisenhower's new plan for the severe attack ever since the new containment of communism in policy was placed before Congress last week. There is little doubt that the plan will survive but there is some question whether Dulles will remain in office.

Both the plan and the durable

There is no suggestion that Dulles, whom many political pundits blame for the current Suez crisis, will leave the Eisenhower cabinet immediately, but seasoned Washington observers wouldn't be surprised to see him dropped quietly after a face-saving period of six or eight months.

Eisenhower placed his new policy, which could put U.S. troops into the Middle East to fight Communist aggression, before Congress with a great deal of fanfare and in the obvious hope and expectation that it would get quick bipartisan approval.

RAISE SERIOUS QUESTIONS

It didn't work that way. The Democrats began shooting an embarrassingly large number of holes through the doctrine, raising serious questions about both the refurbished Middle East program and the whole Eisenhower-Dulles management of foreign affairs.

At the same time, they levelled a withering fire on Dulles, questioning his good faith, asserting that he varied his interpretation of international affairs to suit political exigencies and charging that he had treated Britain and France in a fashion that helped produce the Suez fiasco of last October.

The attack brought clearly into the open the fact that a large segment of the Democratic side has lost confidence in Dulles. Democratic coolness toward the secretary of state has been growing for some time. The Suez crisis precipitated it, but this was too late for full expression during the November 6th general election campaign.

Observers noted that the brunt of the attack in the Senate was being carried by the most responsible and informed foreign policy experts of the Democratic party, men who had tended to support Dulles and the president in the past.

U.S., British Defence Plans Reaffirmed

WASHINGTON (CP)—The American and British defence chiefs announced today that in their just-concluded conferences they reaffirmed the solidarity of their defence objectives.

They said they agreed also on the importance of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization in safe-guarding the stability of the world.

In a communiqué issued jointly by Secretary of Defence Charles Wilson of the U.S. and Defence Minister Duncan Sandys of Britain, the two men said that during their series of meetings here this week, they also agreed that:

"Priority must be given to maintaining effective military capacity in a high state of readiness" and "this must include conventional forces as well as nuclear power."

WEAPONS DISCUSSED

The "possible adoption by Britain of certain American weapons was further explored and this matter is being referred to the two governments for further consideration."

The final meeting of top level defence officials from both countries was held Friday afternoon.

The joint statement said "the ministers also reviewed the progress of collaboration between the United States and Britain in research and development" and that "they noted with satisfaction the mutually beneficial results already achieved by co-operation and decided to continue and expand their joint work in this field."

Wilson and Sandys said it was recognized "that financial and economic stability is an essential foundation of military strength and that due account must be taken of this in considering what a country can contribute to the common defence efforts."

The mention of financial and economic stability was an obvious reference to Britain's plans to cut her defence budget.

Parents can help overcome the problem in cases where they know their children are gifted by providing them with plenty of reading material and encouraging reading habits.

Dr. Laycock advises that parents give these children, as far as finances will permit, opportunities to go on trips, to concerts and to meet other gifted people.

"But most important," he adds, "is that parents accept the child as is—taking into consideration that he is still a child—and seeing that there is a secure home."

"Many parents do their best to make the child average and to discourage his brightness. They want him to be popular at all costs. They prefer him to be mediocre and to 'conform to the herd.'

This, says Dr. Laycock, is a tragedy both for the child and society. Parents shouldn't exploit a gifted child, but they should accept him and help him to be his best and to find by in good achievement.

"At the same time, he must be taught to accept his high ability with modesty and to respect others whose ability differs from his."

Dr. Laycock quoted St. Paul that gifted children should be helped "to suffer fools gladly—not bitterly, desparingly or cynically, but gladly."

The St. John Ambulance Brigade has 127,000 members in Britain and 60,000 more throughout the world.
