NEW YORK (AP) — Bobby Bragan likes soda pop, orange flavor. Likes it so much he willingly pays $100 a cup for it.

That's what the impish Pittsburgh Pirate manager was fined for ambling on the field after being ousted from a game at Milwaukee and offering each of the four umpires a drink of his soda pop. Bragan later announced the incident marked his debut as a major league clown, although he would have to admit he served an apprenticeship in the minors.

There was the time, for instance, when he used eight pinch-hitters for one batter when he became peeved at an umpire's decision.

And there also was the time he lay down at home plate and took a short snooze in another reprisal against a man in blue.

When he first took the job of managing the Pirates, he admitted that he had a couple of other tricks in his bag. The - Milwaukee affair might be one, of them.

Bragan's droll way of putting a little color—orange—in the game was not appreciated by National League president Warren Giles. SERIOUS BUSINESS

Baseball is a serious business to Giles. For a manager to be tossed out of a game for vehemently protesting a decision is one thing, to make a joke of it is another.

100

Away from the field, Bragan is a personable little guy with dark, bold eyes which flash sparks when he argues. But anthere always is that hint of impish humor present. He has an inherent suspicion of umpires. He doesn't question their integrity, but will often question their
