Murder threatens an industry

IN LAKES HURON AND MICHIGAN lake trout stocks have collapsed. Sea lampreys, grey-black cel-like creatures that feed on the blood and body juices of fish, have been the main cause. Now lampreys are in Superior another Gréat Lake is threatened.

To find a solution to the lamprey menace, Canada and the United States have joined forces in the Great Lakes Fisheries Convention. Scientists of both countries are striving to find ways of keeping the lamprey under control. Already, extensive field work is being carried out in northwestern Ontario waters.

A great deal of experimentation and research has still to be done before the lake trout fishery in the Great Lakes can be saved and restored. But this work is being carried out as quickly and efficiently as humanly possible.
