The motorist today is confused by conflicting claims of competitive gasolines. Not every motorist feels that these gasolines live up to the claims made for them. As a result, he is becoming sceptical.

Tri-Cresyl-Phosphate

TCP is not a combination of letters invented merely to impress the motorist. TCP describes the chemical Tri-Cresyl-Phosphate. Its use was developed by Shell Oil over a period of years, as part of Shell's programme of research to bring you better motoring. TCP was designed to eliminate the effect of deposits that form in your car engine. These deposits cause engine misfiring and pre-ignition—stop you from getting top efficiency from your engine. This is what TCP was designed to stop. And it does it.

Only Shell Gasolines

bave patented TCP additive

The Canadian Government granted Shell a patent on the use of TCP in 1955. This was official recognition of the advantages offered to Canadian motorists by this proven product of Shell Research. No other gasoline has patented TCP.

Again, on February 14th, 1957, Judge Holtzoff of the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia ruled that Shell was entitled to a patent for Shell gasolines with TCP.

In his ruling Judge Holtzoff said:

"There would seem to be no doubt that the inventors in this case made an important discovery: namely, the ability to eliminate or at least substantially to reduce the souling of spark plugs ... "

The U.S. Government has not granted a patent on any other gasoline additive that corrects this costly engine fault.

This is the story of TCP—the patented gasoline additive designed to restore peak efficiency to your car engine.

Shell Premium—and Shell Gasoline, too—contain TCP, to give you better motoring and longer engine life. This is what TCP means to you,
