LIGHT-HEARTED SPORTS WRITER-When Vern DeGeer writes a sports column in the Montreal Gazette the response from readers may range from a bagful of letters to a gift of a case of pickles. Readers have to be prepared for startling digressions from the ordinary field of sports comment. Here Gazette cartoonist John Collins, a partner-in-gag of DeGeer's, portrays the impish sportswriter with some of the oddities with which he lards his columns. Once De-Geer asked in the midst of a paragraph on horse-racing: "Does anybody know the name of Paul Revere's horse." A few days later, in the same vein, he asked for the name of fabled Paul Bunyan's blue ox. Readers plugged the Gazette switch-board to say the name was "Babe," Another time he started a discussion which even brought blueprints from an engineer reader on disappearing goalposts. DeGeer often refers to his native Saskatoon as "You Know Where Sask." The bird in the bathtub is what DeGeer describes as a rare short-necked blunt-billed honking goose he once picked up in a Chinese market. (CP Photo)
