WHAT CAN WILSON DO WITH MEXICO?

From our telegraphic despatches of yesterday it not only appears that President Wilson has determined on the United States undertaking an armed intervention into Mexican affairs, but that Great Britain, France and Germany, whose capitalists hold large interests in Mexico, are in hearty support of his policy. What the United States can do in Mexico beyond spending a vast amount of its own people's money it is hard to say, and the support of the powers mentioned to the Wilson policy may merely be because nothing could possibly be worse than conditions in Mexico ever since the revolutionists exiled Dictator Porfirio Diaz.

That this American intervention means war is shown · by the massing of American troops along the Mexican border and the placing of a large American fleet in the harbor of Vera Cruz-the latter a deliberate act of hostility by all the canons of international law. What can the United States hope to gain by such intervention, either for herself or the friendly powers supporting her in this policy? Under the Monroe policy she cannot take and hold Mexico by conquest, and the idea of exerting any moral influence in such a country is mere piffle.

If Huerta is eliminated a Mexican of exactly the same kidney will take his place. Mexico is a Latin country, with Latin traditions, and it is impossible to conceive by what course of reasoning there can be any insistence from Washington that an Anglo-Saxon system of government can be established there, when 90 per cent. of the population can neither read nor write.
