DAILY EDITION

Monday, Jan. 5, 1914

It is a regrettable state of affairs when an election must be fought on a personal issue. In most cases the issues are sufficiently clear to eclipse anything of a personal nature. In the present one, however, while there are policies as divergent as the poles, yet the chief objectional feature of one of the candidates is his benighted personality.

When the present management secured control of The News it started out with the avowed intention of rising above all the petty quarrels and nasty bickerings for which our city has grown famous. This resolution was made, not only because such conduct is beneath the dignity of a city such as ours, but also because hatred, jealousy and strife are known to all thinking people to have no other effect than that of breaking down and weakening human personality. An objectionable character may revel all he likes in his own vile dungeon, but when he endeavors to besmirch society with his own black bile then decent people are bound to resent it, and while that resentment may have in it a great deal of pity and charity, yet because of the common good the blows must descend with killing force.

Sam Newton as a politician is a degenerate. With a vile rag of a paper he has persistently tried to poison the publie mind. He has continually attacked men of high character by malicious slander, for no other reason than that of a personal spleen. He uttered a couple of words too many at one time and received the biting reproof of the law. This however only made him a little more cautious and his poisonous slime is still dealt out to all who cross his purposes. He is even small and contemptible enough to charge an unoffending citizen with selling his soul for the mean sum of twentyfive dollars, and yet this is the man whom respectable citizens champion their cause.

There are other issues in . this, campaign, but the personality of Sam Newton makes GENERAL MANAGER them very secondary. You may vote down the Hydro-Electric agreement if you will, but dont insult this city by electing serving people.
