GOING MAD FROM THE TERRIFIC PAIN

Prominent Merchant Thinks His Life Was Saved By "Fruit-a-tives".

BRISBANE, ONT., June 15th, 1913.

I am a general storekeeper at the above address, and on account of the great good I have experienced from "Fruit-a-tives", I recommend them to my customers. They were a boon to me, I can tell you, for after two years ago, I was laid up in bed with vomiting and a terrific pain in the base of my skull. The pain drove me mad. Doctors feared I would turn to Inflammation of the brain, but I took "Fruit-a-tives" daily until I was cured. I have gained fifteen pounds since taking "Fruit-a-tives", and I verily believe I saved me from a disastrous illness.

GERMANY'S WAR PLANS AS TOLD IN GEN. VON BERNHARDI'S BOOK

MANY OF INCIDENTS THERE RELATED HAVE ALREADY HAPPENED IN THE GREAT WAR—CAN GERMANY CARRY OUT THIS PROGRAM?

Two or three years ago a distinguished Prussian officer, General von Bernhardi, published a book entitled "Germany and the Next War" to which people are turning with interest now that "the next war" has come. General von Bernhardi's book is an argument that Germany must crush France and destroy the British Empire, and many of his observations are astonishingly cynical. For instance, he lays down the principle that Italy must not be allowed to entertain friendly feelings for France, and that it is Germany's business to stir up ill-feeling between the two great Latin countries. In the course of his book he discusses the features of such a war as the present, Germany fighting Russia, France and Great Britain. His remarks on the naval strategy of the war are illuminating at the present time, when the German fleet is lying ensconced in harbor and the British fleet is challenging it to come out.

What Bernhardi Foresaw.

In his analysis General von Bernhardi had assumed a state of affairs in which the surprise attack upon English harbors has failed, the German fleet has retreated under the guns of the coast fortifications, and German overseas commerce has been paralyzed by the British fleet. As these things have actually occurred, just as the general said they would occur, it is worth while to note what in these circumstances he proposes should be done next. For the chances are that, whatever it is, the Germans, having learned the Bernhardi doctrines by heart, are doing it.

As seaborne supplies are cut off from German ports, General von Bernhardi proposes that they should be imported through neutral harbors and neutral territory.

"Let us assume," he proceeds, "that France and Russia seal our land frontiers, then the only trade route left open to us is through Switzerland and Austria—a condition of affairs which would aggravate difficulties at home and should stimulate us to carry on the war with increased vigor." The stimulus has now been applied; it remains to be seen what will be the reaction to it.

The Blockade of the North Sea.

Such being the condition of affairs, General von Bernhardi goes on to consider the blockade which he thinks the English would certainly apply. There are two kinds of blockade; the close blockade and the distant blockade. The close blockade would be exercised upon the German North Sea littoral and the Danish Straits; the distant blockade would extend across "the open sea between the north of Scotland and Norway," and across the mouth of the Channel.

With regard to the close blockade, "the English, if they planned such a blockade, would doubtless count on acquiring bases on our own coast; perhaps also on the Dutch coast. Our task, therefore, is to prevent such attempts by every means. . . . This task can only be fulfilled by the fleet in daytime by submarines; by night torpedo boats may co-operate. . . . We must endeavor by renewed and unexpected attacks, especially by night, partly with submarines and torpedo boats, partly with battleships, to give the blockading fleet no breathing time, and to cause it as much loss as possible." These tactics are, of course, purely defensive, and defensive tactics never yet won a campaign.

The Use of Forts.

But, continues the tactician, in a significant passage, "We must not engage in a battle with superior hostile forces, for it is hardly possible at sea to discontinue a fight, because there is no place whither the loser can withdraw from the effect of the enemy's guns." The general has discovered a great truth, which, in the British fleet, is expressed in the classic formula, "There is no back door in the navy." The lack of that emergency exit troubles General von Bernhardi. Apparently his theory is that the weaker fleet ought invariably to fight under the guns of a fort or not fight at all. His whole conception of naval warfare is colored by the pathetic conviction that land fortifications are an essential part of sea warfare. The defending fleet, he affirms, ought "to lie in safe anchorage," waiting until a squadron of the attacking fleet is isolated, when the defending fleet would "sally out and fight." The general considers that the success of these tactics would be such that the English would not attempt the close blockade, but would apply the distant blockade.

In the case of the distant blockade, von Bernhardi can see no hope of a successful attack by the German fleet, except by operating with the main fleet through the Skagerak, because—notable reason—the way of retreat would then be open behind the fleet. "This accentuates once more the supreme importance to us of keeping open, at all costs, the passage through the Sound and the Great Belt." But the general is not hopeful of the success of these tactics, either. He observes that although the attacking party would be weakened and wearied, so would the defending party.

The Landing of Troops.

He next considers what would happen if the English attempted to land troops. They could not obtain a decisive result unless they attempted to capture our naval bases—Wilhelmshaven, Heligoland, the mouth of the Elbe, and Kiel—and to annihilate our fleet in its attempt to protect these places. . . . Here the general has been proved mistaken. It did not occur to him that a containing force could enable troops to be safely transported across the sea as happened when the British army was transported to France without the German navy being able to cause a single casualty.

To obtain information of the position of the attacking force, von Bernhardi relies upon the air fleet, which would also attack the English fleet. . . . The most reckless audacity must go hand in hand with the employment of every means which mechanical skill and the science of naval construction and fortification can supply. This is the only way by which we may hope so to weaken our proud opponent, that we may in the end challenge him to a decisive engagement in the open sea."

A Counsel of Despair.

General von Bernhardi then considers the effect of a campaign in which the French fleet combined with the British fleet. It would be that "the prospect of any ultimately successful issue" for Germany would "shrink into the background." But, he adds, "we need not even then despair. The remedy will be the absolute conquest of France."

Such is the naval policy, such are the strategy and tactics, of the German war party. A study of them leads to the conclusion that, under the conditions they reveal, the engaging in war by Germany, on her own showing, is one of the most perilous and wicked experiments it is possible to conceive.

NO ALUM

BRITAIN WOULD BUY SOME TIMBER HERE

One Big Order Already Placed but Difficulty Has Arisen Over Lack of Available Shipping.

Vancouver, Sept. 22.—The general disruption of the shipping business of the world consequent upon the war, notwithstanding the fact that Great Britain holds undisputed command of the seas, is having a damaging effect upon trade conditions in this province. The timber interests of British Columbia have just been given an unpleasant reminder to this effect, according to an announcement made to the Victoria Colonist by Mr. H. R. MacMillan, chief of the forest branch of the provincial government.

"The Baltic being now a closed sea to all intents and purposes," said Mr. MacMillan, "Great Britain is cut off from one of the main sources of her timber supply, and some few days ago a large order was placed with timber producers in this province. This was welcomed as the forerunner of some big business, at least during the continuation of the war, but, owing to the inability to get tonnage to handle the shipment, it is feared that there will be great delay in handling the business, if the order is not lost entirely. Ships that are offering to handle the lumber are disposed to ask such a rate as to make the cost in freight charges quite prohibitive."

"Another interesting development since the outbreak of war is the fact that for the first time the Imperial government, for postoffice requirements, is seeking to place an order in British Columbia for 300,000 telegraph and telephone poles. This order cannot for the present, it is feared, be filled, for the reasons I have mentioned. This is all the more regrettable from the fact that our timber is far superior to the pine from Riga and other points whence Britain gets her timber. Our cedar poles are straighter than those of pine, and in many other particulars are superior."

LEAVING VERA CRUZ.

Order for Evacuation by American Forces Issued by President Wilson.

Washington, D. C., Sept. 22.—The evacuation of Vera Cruz has been ordered by President Wilson. The American soldiers and marines, under General Funston, who have held Mexico's principal seaport since it was seized by the fleet April 21 last, will embark for home as soon as transports can go after them, and shortly afterwards all of the war fleet, with the exception of a few light draft vessels, will be withdrawn.

The order for evacuation was formally announced at the White House after a long cabinet meeting. It is the concluding chapter of the second armed conflict between the United States and Mexico, in which a score of Americans lost their lives, and nearly a hundred were wounded, while upwards of three hundred Mexicans were killed or wounded.

DAILY EDITION

Tuesday, Sept. 22, 1914.

It is very much to be regretted that the Canadian troops have not got an earlier start for the front. The first stages of the war are the critical ones and Canada should have been represented. A great deal of time seems to have been spent at Valcartier in perfecting the marching of the troops, and cleaning up their brass buttons. They should have taken the advice of Lord Kitchener when he said, "Teach them how to shoot," and the rest will take care of itself. It is safe to say that the class of men who go from Canada are already crack shots and would be very valuable at the front even without brass buttons.

One of the things most noticeable as the war goes on is that business in general keeps up in a very satisfactory manner. True it is that it does not boom as it did in the palmy days but it keeps a good average. People will always have to eat and wear clothes and undergo the usual expense connected with business and living. In any line which is not already overcrowded it will be well able to take care of itself. Business, therefore, being much better than was anticipated, everybody should take the clue and become optimistic.

Vancouver is agitating for a special moratorium for Canada covering all mortgages and agreements for sale. There is no doubt but that some precautionary measures should be taken to protect people who are likely to be ruined because of the war. It must be remembered, however, that a moratorium covering all mortgages and realty payments would only help one class by hurting the other. It would be much better if it were done as The News suggested some time ago, to put the whole thing in the hands of the courts and apply it only in cases where there is an absolute need.

COST OF WAR TO GREAT BRITAIN

London, Sept. 22.—Calculations based on official returns show the cost to Great Britain of 43 days of warfare, counting from August 1, when disbursements began, has been about $166,500,000.

IS FLOATING MENACE TO SHIPS IN THE PACIFIC

British Vessel Is Sighted in Dismantled Condition on Way to Australia.

After a trip in which she completely circled the globe, the American five-masted schooner Inca is at port Townsend. The Inca left Vancouver a year ago with lumber for East London, South Africa.

With the crew of this vessel were two young men of Seattle, H. K. Sander and L. Y. Kittinger, who signed on at Victoria, and they tell interesting tales of their experiences.

The voyage was uneventful until February 4 at 6 a. m., in latitude 26 degrees 33 minutes south, longitude 122 degrees 41 minutes west, when the Inca sighted the dismantled British ship Dalgona, lying on her beam ends. The Inca went within about 200 yards of the wreck. A small boat was lowered and Sander, the most adventurous of the entire crew, went aboard the floating derelict. The big sailing craft was deserted and there was every evidence that the men aboard her had left in great haste.

Souvenirs of Wreck.

All of the ship's stores were in their place, the larder was well supplied and two small boats were hanging to the davits. Sander went to the captain's room, where he found a number of navigating instruments, which he brought with him to Seattle as souvenirs.

"The position of the Dalgona, as far as I could determine, was about half way between the South American and South Australian coasts," said Sander.

"She is riding high in the water and a great menace to navigation. The wreck would be extremely dangerous at night, but fortunately it is out of the path of steamers."

The Dalgona sailed from Callao, Peru, for Taital, Chile, in ballast. She was sighted by the French bark Marie in longitude 95 degrees 7 minutes west, latitude 27 degrees south, dismantled and deserted. The Marie put into San Francisco with the news of the disaster.

Crew Picked Up.

All who were aboard the Dalgona were believed to be lost until the French ship Loire, bound for Dover, was spoken at sea and reported that she had picked up 27 members of the crew on October 28, 1913, about 1,200 miles off the coast of Chile. The Loire's master stated that Capt. J. Bester and three members of the crew of the Dalgona had lost their lives. The survivors of the wreck were landed at Dover and sent to their homes.

The explained to the master of the Loire that the Dalgona's ballast had shifted and that she had turned over on her side and all her masts carried away.

MUST CRUSH GERMANY.

Then Allies Will Talk Peace With President Wilson.

Washington, D. C., Sept. 21.—There is at present no prospect of peace in Europe through the efforts of diplomacy. President Wilson himself set at rest the rumors that peace measures were in the making by revealing that no intimation had been conveyed to him officially from any quarter of a readiness on the part of one or more of the belligerents to talk peace.

The day's developments emphasized that Great Britain, France and Russia were grimly determined to make no peace until they had decisively beaten Germany and Austria. Great Britain's position was explained in detail at London by Sir Edward Grey to Ambassador Page, who made a long report to President Wilson. The British foreign secretary declared Britain had not sought war, but since it was forced on her, she was irrevocably bent on crushing forever the dangers of German militarism to the world.

JUST TEACH THEM HOW TO SHOOT

Lord Kitchener says: "Never mind whether the volunteers know anything about drill. It does not matter if they don't know their right foot from their left. Teach them how to shoot, and do it quick."

A large percentage of the British volunteers come right in the scope of this advice. In a free country like England and Canada no man is expected to learn how to use a rifle in times of peace unless he feels like it. If he wants to go hunting he gets familiar with a gun. Or he may join a rifle association for the fun of aiming at bull's eyes.

But in England there are millions of men who have never handled a gun. London swarms with derelicts who have never smelt gunpowder. In the 300,000 men recently enlisted there are probably 100,000 whose chief knowledge of a gun is that it goes off when you pull the trigger and hits something if it happens to be in the way.

But these men can be taught to shoot a great deal quicker than they can be made to drill. In the opinion of a Canadian military officer a gun-ignoramus can become a good shot in three months with an hour's practice every day. A few weeks on the ranges should make the British volunteer who doesn't understand a gun as good a marksman as many of the German reservists. A man will learn to shoot much more rapidly when he feels that in a few weeks or months he may have something to hit that will be of great use to his country after he has hit it.

GREAT BATTLE OF AISNE DEVELOPED INTO SIEGE ALLIES ON OFFENSIVE

(Special to The Daily News—1:30 P. M.) London, Sept. 22.—The allied troops have appeared around Peronne, attacking the German extreme right at St. Quentin.

The Germans have constructed a series of small fortresses along 100 miles of the banks of the Oise to Meuse and the great battle of Aisne has developed into a siege.

Experts believe that only one result can come out of such a situation, and that is the defeat of the besieged.

The Germans suffered heavily in hand-to-hand fighting at Crayonne yesterday. The Allies have made progress where the greatest danger threatens the invaders.

One of the aldermen last evening pointed out that there were at present three trains coming to Fort George, while only two came through to Prince Rupert.

SITUATION IN FRANCE STILL UNCHANGED—ENEMY VERY ACTIVE

(Special to The Daily News—1 P. M.) Paris, Sept. 22.—The official announcement says the Germans were active yesterday but without any appreciable results.

On the center, between Rheims and Sionis, the enemy attempted an offensive movement which was repulsed, while between Souain and Argonne we have made some progress.

There is no change between Argonne and the Meuse. The Germans made violent attempts to gain the heights of the Meuse along the right front between Trassauvaux and Handicourt.

On our right wing in Lorraine the Germans have reoccupied Domestrie.

CITY COUNCIL BRIEFS

The city will lay a two-inch water pipe to the municipal wharf in Section Two.

The Northern B. C. Agricultural Association requested the City Council to declare a holiday the second day of the fair, October 1. This was agreed to.

The city clerk received a reply to the letter which he wrote to the commission looking into the high cost of living complaining of the price of coal in Prince Rupert. It will be looked into.

Bids were received by the Council from several automobile companies giving prices on tires for the fire truck. It was referred to the board of works with power to act.

The Union of B. C. Municipalities will hold its annual meeting in Kamloops October 22 and 23. A communication was read at the Council meeting asking that a representative be sent.

H. S. Wallace Co. wrote the City Council last night asking that in view of the improbability of work starting this year on the postoffice, the sidewalk be widened to the usual width.

In the estimates read by the Council last night was an item of some seven thousand dollars for water pipe manufactured in Germany. Alderman Morrissey wanted to know if the war affected this contract.

The city clerk reported that the petitions against the redecking of Fifth and Sixth avenues were insufficiently signed to prove effective.

In connection with this discussion it was pointed out that two-thirds of this work was already done and hence could not be paid by bylaw but out of the general funds. The city solicitor will report on this.

The present censor on wireless messages is working a hardship on local merchants, who cannot get in touch with vessels carrying their freights. This was brought up at the Council but it was felt that since all ships were dismantled of their wireless apparatus it would be impossible to get the service resumed at present.
