SIR WM. VAN HORNE DIED ON SATURDAY

Montreal, Sept. 13.—Sir William Van Horne died at 2:10 Saturday afternoon. He had been seriously ill at the Royal Victoria Hospital for more than two weeks. He went there for an operation for abdominal abscess. The operation was successfully performed, and for a time there were indications that he would recover. Grave symptoms, however, developed earlier this week, and since then Sir William had been gradually failing.

Always a Railroad Man.

William Cornelius Van Horne was born in 1843 in Will County, Illinois, and when fourteen years of age, entered the service of the Illinois Central Railway as a telegraph operator. In 1858 he went to the Michigan Central and during the next six years served that road in various capacities. He was ticket agent and telegraph operator for six months, train despatcher for three years, superintendent of telegraphs and finally divisional superintendent. In 1864 he went to the Chicago & Alton and remained eight years. In 1872 he became general superintendent of the St. Louis, Kansas City & Northern. Two years later he went to the Southern Minnesota Railroad as general manager and was later made president. In 1878 he was back with the Chicago & Alton as general superintendent and next year he became general superintendent of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul, at that time the most extensive railway in America. In 1880 he became general manager of the Canadian Pacific and carried that road to completion. He became vice-president of the road in 1884, and president in 1888. In 1899, he retired from the presidency but remained chairman of the board of directors until 1910. He was knighted by Queen Victoria in 1894.

Sir William Van Horne was a giant among railroad men, not only in Canada, but on the entire continent. He was a very large man with a huge head and the energy of a steam engine. It has been told that in the days after he first took up the burden of directing the destinies of the Canadian Pacific, he allowed himself only three hours' sleep in the twenty-four. The other twenty-one, for weeks at a time, he devoted to the railroad. He had a theory, which his friends used to smile at, that every man was born lazy and was driven to work by necessity. Work became a habit and finally part of the man's character. Whatever was the

HONORARY LIEUT.-COLONELS ON PICCADILLY FIRING LINE

BATTALIONS OF SIR SAM'S BODY GUARD OF HON. LIEUT.-COLS.
GUARDING LONDON NIGHT AND DAY—BRILLIANT
ADVANCES ON THE GAITY AND ALHAMBRA

Ottawa, Sept. 11.—Shell deliveries may fall behind schedule, uniforms may be lacking, the soldiers may need socks, while Major-General Sir Sam Hughes is in England having a good time, but one Canadian military activity still goes forward with increasing speed—the making of honorary colonels. Brisk enough in times of peace, it has gained new impetus from the stirring events in Europe. Canada seems to be full of heroes who are willing and even anxious to defend the British Empire as honorary colonels.

Honorary colonels are a prerogative of Major-General Sir Sam Hughes and he exercises it relentlessly. No matter what happens, Canada must maintain its force of honorary colonels at full strength. The Minister of Militia makes it a rule that every Canadian drawing $5,000 a year or over shall be an honorary colonel. He may try to beg off on the plea that he is already a K. C. or an L. L. D., but no excuses will be accepted. The order has gone out that no prominent citizen shall escape. Canada, speaking through Major-General Sir Sam, expects every man, not enlisted as a private, to do his duty by becoming an honorary colonel.

After all it is only logical. Major-General Sir Sam goes to London, gets a reputation as a character, attracts the attention of George the Fifth, who touches him with a blunt sword and says, "Arise, Sir Sam." The King's touch has done it. As our French brothers say, le roi s'amuse by making Sam Hughes a knight. By virtue of his office as Minister of Militia Sam has the touch too, why shouldn't he use it? If le roi s'amuse by creating knights, why shouldn't Sam Hughes s'amuse by making honorary colonels. The answer is that he does it.

He can do it with either hand or with both hands tied behind his back. He can do it at home and abroad. In fact he can do it anywhere because the touch does not depend upon personal contact. It is effective by telegraph. If by any chance a distinguished Canadian takes a trip to England without first becoming an honorary colonel, he can wire to militia headquarters at Ottawa and have it cabled to him at this country's expense. Now that Major-General Sir Sam has returned we may expect the cable business in honorary colonels to be swelled enormously.

There are hundreds of Canadian honorary colonels in London. They include not only the ones Sir Sam made while he was over there, but the ones he made before he left, and the number surprised even Sir Thomas Shaughnessy, who is an honorary colonel himself. Sir Thomas, when he was last in London saw in the short space of Cockspur Street, where the C. P. R. offices are situated, more honorary colonels than he had ever suspected. He didn't know there were that many honorary colonels in the whole world, much less in Canada. He saw honorary colonels in khaki whose names had not been on the C. P. R. pass list for years. It looked as if the very graves had opened to give up their honorary colonels. For the first time in his life Sir Thomas got an idea of the vastness and ubiquity of that legion of honorary colonels to which he belongs.

Instead of pointing to it with pride Sir Thomas was inclined to view the spread of honorary colonels with alarm, and when he came home to Montreal he gave vent more or less publicly to his feelings. At all events he told the reporters what he had seen, at the same time wondering what the deuce so many honorary colonels were doing over there.

He needn't have wondered. Sir Sam could have told him that there are many patriotic and tactical reasons for keeping an army division of Canadian honorary colonels in London. In the first place it is cheaper to keep a Canadian honorary colonel in England than in Canada. In the second place the honorary colonels could not be restrained. The very minute war broke out all the honorary colonels who had the price of a steamship ticket sprang to the defence of the Empire. Yes, Sir, they sprang—no milder word describes it—they sprang to arms, as with one accord and just how far they sprang you can see by looking on the map for London. London is in the war zone, it is perhaps one hundred and fifty miles from the firing line, but what reck our honorary colonels of that? They live on danger. Such risks are their very bread. Braving the perils of sleeping cars and first-class cabins, they rush at the call of duty to London and there they stick. Zeppelins! Poof! They have no fear of Zeppelins. From the crypt of Westminster Abbey or the subcellar of the Bank of England they defy these monsters of the air and when the danger is overpassed, they take their old seats in the restaurants just as if nothing had happened. It keeps the British people from getting downhearted to see them sitting there eating chicken and drinking champagne

WESTERN FRONT

After many days of "artillery duels," "artillery exchanges" and "fierce artillery fighting" on the western front, it was refreshing and cheering to learn on Saturday that the Crown Prince's army had made a desperate attack and had been ultimately repulsed with heavy losses. One takes it as a matter of course now that the Huns use liquid fire, gas, or any diabolical weapon they think fit, to oust the Allied soldiers from their positions, but our troops have again demonstrated that they can cope with such methods successfully by retreating until the German advance begins and then charging the oncoming enemy.

One has been inclined to become impatient at the apparent lack of action on the western front, but it is impossible to criticise without an intimate knowledge of conditions. When one feels disposed to criticise the lack of movement, it might be well to remember the story of the youngster of five, who, on hearing his dad blaming the late General Buller for lack of progress at a certain stage of the Boer war, said, "Say Papa, is it the case that ordinary gentlemen at home know far more about the war than the generals at the front?" It is only natural to expect action, and it is just as natural to resent apparent inaction, when all are so anxious to see the Germans driven out of France and Belgium and finally utterly defeated, but it is well to remember that the Allied leaders are even more anxious than anyone else can be to see the matter ended successfully.

ELECTION RUMORS

The latest Ottawa rumor is that there is to be a Dominion election in the fall. So far as the Liberals are concerned it is immaterial when it comes. If there was any truth in the statement, issued after Bob Rogers' strenuous effort had been nipped in the bud, that an election would not be held until near the close of the war, then we may take it that Ottawa believes that the war is nearly over. Of course a great deal may happen between rumor and an election, in fact a lot may happen between an official announcement by a premier and an election, as shown in British Columbia last April. However, it seems unlikely that there is any truth in this latest rumor. The government has still over a year of life in the ordinary course of things, and there is only one pressing business before the country—the carrying on of Canada's share in the war. There is no diversity of opinion on that score, and the opposition has promised, and is fulfilling the promise, to aid the government in every way possible to render assistance to the mother land in the crisis.

An election this fall would be merely a matter of political expediency, and this is no time for politics, so far as the Dominion is concerned. It is possible that the election weather recorders in Ottawa think it advisable to make an effort to get in out of the rain before the deluge comes in British Columbia. They are probably aware that what happened in Manitoba was merely a summer shower compared to what will happen on the coast. In any case Sir Robert Borden and his advisers are between "the devil and the deep sea."

in the same old courageous way. Yes, the Canadian honorary colonels in London are brave men. They are almost as brave as the honorary colonels and church-parade colonels who could go to the front if they liked, because the consent of wives and parents is no longer required, but who choose to remain at home and fight public opinion instead.

The tactical reasons for keeping a large body of Canadian honorary colonels in London are quite as strong as the patriotic ones. One reason is that there must always be a sufficient number of honorary colonels to hold the eye of the British public, and divert attention from the real colonels who are being killed in the war. The presence of a competent force of well-fed honorary colonels, comfortably orbicular in figure, not only gives a sense of security not otherwise obtainable, but also impresses the fact that every member of our far-flung Empire is doing his duty and that the young whelps will always respond to the old lion's call, as our orators have it. Not only that, but the honorary colonels keep Canada in the social columns of the London daily papers, which is almost as good as being mentioned in Sir John French's despatches—almost as good and much safer.

A certain number of our honorary colonels may always be seen in Victoria Street where is the High Commissioner's office and ballot boxes with the votes for soldiers which are to go forward to the front as soon as the Germans will allow a general election. But mostly our honorary colonels are detailed on park, theatre and restaurant duty. Green Park, St. James Park, Hyde Park, Regents Park, Rotten Row, the Marble Arch, all know them and their handsome uniforms. They lend color to the night life of Piccadilly and may be seen on Regent Street after eleven p. m. in pursuit of their duty.

They cluster in large bunches around the theatres and music halls and have been known to penetrate to the stalls and occupy the boxes. The chorus has no terrors for these brave men. In the neighborhood of the Gaiety, that citadel of musical comedy and terpsichorean art, one fights his way through a cordon of honorary colonels. They have a clever way of defending the box office. They buy all the tickets and the public can buy what's left. Woman suffrage is no longer a menace to the British Empire, but the honorary colonels are on the lookout for any other feminist movement that may threaten peace. That is why they keep such a close eye on the Gaiety and the Alhambra and places like that.

The restaurant service is perhaps the most important duty our honorary colonels have to do in London. It is to their benefit and ours that they should dine well and they do in every lobster palace from the Marble Arch to Fleet Street. Wherever fashion has planted a ten course dinner, be it Piccadilly or the Strand, there may our honorary colonels be seen in bottle array, not to say sherryed ranks, rallying around the old flag and enjoying it immensely. War has no effect on their high spirits.

Such are the moving accidents of flood and field which Major-General Sir Sam's honorary colonels meet so gaily in London. They are posted at all the strategic spots, the Savoy, the Cecil, the Carlton, the Piccadilly, the Ritz and nobly have they done their duty. They have done it so well that they have raised the price of many staples on the bill-of-fare. For example a certain famous liqueur brandy which was four shillings per glass is now five and sweetbreads have gone up sixpence—all due to the elevating effect of our honorary colonels. Incidentally they are doing a great work in London for mankind in general. They are fighting for our ideals as well as their own. For instance it is now

Here's the Sunlight way:

First, soap the garment; then roll it up to soak. After a while, rinse well and the dirt practically drops out. No wearisome scrubbing, no hurtful rubbing—the gentle strength of Sunlight does the work almost without effort and entirely without injury.

Try one cake—you'll find it's kind to the hands, too.

SIR WILLIAM VAN HORNE DIED ON SATURDAY

cause, work without doubt, was a habit with Sir William. When he was railroading, he was collecting pictures or ceramics, or he was sketching or painting himself. If it wasn't one of these, he was directing one of his stock farms, or was making plans for the conservation of Canada's timber or mineral resources. He enjoyed a wide reputation as an art connoisseur and his collection of pictures is one of the best on the continent. He was a recognized authority on ceramics, and an artist himself of no mean ability.

"THE BROKEN COIN" AT THE MAJESTIC THEATRE

The seventh episode of "The Broken Coin" will be shown at the Majestic tonight and tomorrow. The hunt for the parts of the coin goes on as excitingly as ever, and the seventh installment is just as thrilling as the previous ones. "A Lonely Salvation" is a classic drama featuring Mary Fuller, while "Their Bridge Got Mixed" is one of the funniest films seen for a long time. An up-to-date Animated Weekly concludes a real good bill.

On Wednesday and Thursday the Majestic will have a full six-reel program entirely produced by Pathe Freres. This noted firm has only recently opened its own film exchange, and, with their experience of two continents, many a rare treat is in store for Majestic patrons.

The Case of AB Smith, Retailer.

A. B. SMITH has a dry goods store in a certain Canadian city.

He does a good business, but wants to do more. He believes that Advertising in his local newspaper is the way to get more business. So he advertises—every now and then. This is where our friend Smith is wrong—in advertising every now and then. He should advertise regularly—as frequently as his local newspaper is published.

Smith says he wants to advertise regularly, but he can't always find the time to prepare advertisements, which is true, for he is his own buyer, sales-manager, director of store service, credit man and half-a-dozen other things. What Smith should do is this: If he is located in one of the smaller cities, in which there are no advertising agencies giving a local copy service, and he has no one among his own staff qualified by instinct or experience to write the daily announcements, he should go to the publisher of the newspaper in which he means to advertise, requesting his help. In nine cases out of ten, the publisher, through his advertising manager, will be only too glad to give Smith the assistance desired.

If Smith is located in one of the larger cities he should secure the services of a recognized advertising agency which will take over the work of preparing his advertisements.

In this way Smith can be sure of having his advertisements prepared regularly and intelligently, with no more trouble to him than the supplying of the information required by the writer of the advertisements.

So Smith can do more business, and more business means a larger income for himself, to say nothing of other gains that go hand in hand with the doing of bigger business.

This man Smith---do you know him?
Are YOU Smith?

If you are doing a local business talk over your advertising problems with the Advertising Department of this newspaper.
If you are doing a provincial or national business it would be well for you to have the counsel and assistance of a good advertising agency. A list of these will be furnished, without cost or obligation, by the Secretary of Canadian Press Association, Room 503, Lumsden Building, Toronto.
