TUESDAY, MAY 16

THE PRUDES IN A PANIC

Toronto has just had another spasm of purism, following an agitation in which the morals of schoolchildren were made the subject of some sensational allegations by a public school principal.

There is no sneer intended in the selection of the word spasm, nor in the reference to Toronto's reputation for puritanical zeal. Spasm correctly describes the nature of the efforts, which in their aim are entirely worthy. In aiming to guard the morals of her people, and especially of her boys and girls, the city authorities of Toronto are in the right. The city should be the great protector of the moral and physical life, the great educator, the great philanthropist, the great administrator, the great over-parent of its citizens.

The pity of it is that the effort at moral idealism should be spas modic instead of continuous; should be the result of emotional shock instead of cool reasoning. A patient observer, trained to scientific modes of thought would probably arrive at different conclusions. Instead of concluding as does the affrighted school principal that there are epidemics of moral laxity, he would probably find the roots of the evil in the economic conditions under which a portion of the people in Toronto live. With a large class of young women, hungry for happiness and the joy of life, yet doomed to work in stores and S Peter Black factories at a bare living wage, with thousands of young men similarly situated, unable to afford to offer homes and wife-hood to the women workers, and with yet another class of well-to-do idlers and pleasure seekers, the inherent compulsion of society towards the formation ... Grand Hotel... of courtesan classes and courtesan patronage would be obvious to him.

So too, in regard to the revelations among school children, he would probably find the reason on the one hand in the neurotic conditions of modern life, the tenser atmosphere, the quickened imagination which attends life today, and on the other hand the conspiracy of silence with which the facts of the life-processes are shrouded. Our modern economic life and the trend of education make the child inquisitive: and on the most important subject of all, society conspires to leave him to find things out for himself any way he can.

Unscientific diagnosis engenders unscientific remedies. The purists in Toronto have descended upon the bookstores. They have confiscated the works of Guy de Maupessant and haled to the police | court vendors of erotic fiction of the "Three Weeks" and "The Yoketype. But they have made no effort to rectify the economic conditions | which create both victims and a market for the thing they deplore. As if the destruction of the works of Guy de Maupessant and the erotic school will destroy conditions which existed long before the school of eroticists was born. The irony of the thing is that some of the big storekeepers, who probably have driven more girls into the underworld than all the panders and paid procurers, are good church members, and for their souls' sake would scorn to sell a copy of "Three Weeks."

Less satisfactory even than the well meant but fatuous efforts at moral reform on the part of the police, are the efforts of the Library Board, who ought to know better. They have whisked everything off the library shelves and out of sight that might afford young readers an opportunity to learn those facts about the biology of sex that false standards of modesty preclude most people from discussing with their children. Hauffman's "House of Bondage" has gone the way of the erotics. As if in this as in every other thing, the world is not to be saved by knowledge, just as today it is damned by ignorance.

And still we grow.

Information was laid this morning by George Walters, a Swede, against Dan McInnis, contractor, to the effect that McInnis had WANTS VENUE assaulted Walters. The trouble took place in the Europa Hotel. Several Swedes who had quit the employment of McInnis at their own pleasure got haggling with New Alderman Makes Interestthe contractor over their time. They brought Walters along with them to do the talking as he knows English. Walters had never been employed by McInnis, and the contractor argued that he had no business in the tangle at all. So he ejected him from the hotel where the business was in progress. Dan is muscular and evidently used more strength than he knew. Walters' ribs were hurt. Dan pleaded guilty to the assault charge this morning, and paid his fine of ten dollars and two dollars costs.

TRIAL OF STRIKERS

Ald. Douglas Inquires if Council Could Have Venue Changed-Mayor Replies That It is Too Late Now.

Can the city council do anything to alter the venue of the trial of the strikers? was a question asked by Alderman Douglas last night at the city council meeting. He would have put the matter in the form of a motion that the council should do something, but was not very sure that this would be the best way.

Mayor Manson informed Alderman Douglas that the venue of the trial had now been fixed, and it was not possible for the city Boy to assist in office at Piercy Morris & Co. council to ask or even suggest a change of venue.

CULVERT COLLAPSED

Skeena Land Mistrict-District of Queen Charlotte How Did It Happen, and What Did It Cost?

> In the course of his walks around town recently Alderman GEO. H. LAUX Clayton discovered a culvert on Numa Demers, Agent Third avenue which had evidently collapsed while under construction. He moved at last night's council, that a report be obtained about this, stating who was responsible for the work, how the collapse was caused, and how much it had cost to repair the trouble. Alderman Smith seconded, and the motion was carried.
