Attlee At Cross-Roads

IN AYEK THINKS that the democratic states-I man who sets out to plan economic life will soon be confronted with the alternative of either assuming dictatorial powers or abandoning his plans." That is a quotation from a pamphlet entitled "The Twilight of Freedom" by Dean Inge, and it seems to sum up the situation in which the British Labor Government has found itself as a result of its attempt to put into effect its nationalization program.

Prime Minister Attlee, in making public his government's austerity program to meet the economic crisis, announced that there would be "some measure of control" over employment, including a possible limitation of employment in less essential work. Coal miners and other workers are to be asked to work longer hours and refrain from demanding increased wages. "Effective action" is to be taken to ensure efficient management in industry and the government is to resume virtually all the dictatorial powers it exercised during the war.

At the same time the Labor organ, Daily Herald, says the government will carry on with its nationalization program. The government will still try to accomplish what it promised the people of Britain to do-to set up a socialist state in which there would be economic security for all from the cradle to the grave.

It has been freely predicted for some months in London that the Labor Government would not last the year out, or that some form of coalition would have to be agreed upon in order to save the nation from economic collapse. In this connection it is of interest to recall that the first Labor Government, which came into power after the First Great War, broke on the rocks of an economic crisis. The Labor Party at that time was split in two, and Ramsay MacDonald joined with the Conservatives and Liberals in a National Government to save the ship of state from total wreck.

It looks as if history was about to perform its old stunt of repeating itself, although Mr. Churchill has declared that there will be "no coalition," and the Labor Party has sufficient majority in the Commons, without the extreme leftists, to prevent a defeat. But the people of Britain have for a long time been fed-up with wartime controls and shortages and Mr. Attlee's program of increased controls and austerity may arouse popular clamor for the formation of an emergency Cabinet composed of the best brains of the country. Apart from popular feeling, however, the economic mess in which the government finds itself is liable to grow worse and force Mr. Attlee to resign.

Possibly the Labor Government will assume absolute dictatorial powers, as Hayek points out, and regiment the workers and all the resources of the nation for the carrying out of a series of fiveyear plans on the Soviet model. Mr. Attlee, or his successor, as a democratic statesman, is now confronted with the alternative of either assuming dictatorial powers or abandoning socialistic plans. There is no middle road for the government has come to the parting of the ways. One is the broad highway of democratic freedom, the other is the luring of a socialism which might lead to serfdom under Giant Despair.

LURTHER HONORING his memory, a bronze plaque has been placed on the grave of John Luther Jones at Jackson, Tenn. Far better known as Casey Jones, because he was a native of Cayce-pronounced Casey-Ky., the brave engineer who "died with the throttle in his hand" has become celebrated through song and story since his death on April 29, 1900.

For nearly half a century he has symolzed the men who run the trains, emphasizing the admiration and affection which are for railroad men in general, engineers in particular.

Casey Jones died when the Illinois Central's "Cannonball," a fast train for those days, rammed into a freight train. It was not an unusual accident for that time but the reputation Jones had established made it of almost national interest. He was known as a fine engineer, who always brought his train in on time. He was not on his regular run, having been called to take the place of another who was ill.

He had a peculiar way with the whistle, imitating a whippoorwill, and it is even said his way of handling steam was unusual. According to the song "the switchman knew by the engine's moans that the man at the throttle was Casey Jones."

When man travels largely by air he will have gained speed and comfort but at the expense of romance and tradition. Future generations will have forgotten Casey Jones and his type. But in their day they added much to the nation's progress.

One of the greatest labor-saving inventions of today is

It is more than a generation since the first Doukhobors to ever set foot in Canada landed from a CPR. liner, away down at Sand Point docks, in St. John. Generally speaking, Canadians had the notion they would turn out to be valuable settlers. The fertile prairies offered lots of opportunity to cultivate the soil. It was felt they would soon shake down into life as understood in the Canadian west. To some extent, this turned out to be true. They certainly could raise crops. But, as time went on, Canada experienced a few surprises. Staging parades, in the nude, came as a distinct and embarrassing novelty. However, it was not en-

Display Last Night One of Concluding Features of Port Day

Ship's guns bocmed and reechoed in the far hills, machine guns chattered and flares of variegated hues amid shafts of searchlight play lighted up the clear night skies as a colorful display of pyrotechnics was staged by H.M.S. Kenya and H.M.C.S. Antigonish as a concluding feature of Prince Rupert's Port Day. It was an impressive display all the more appreciated since it was to large extent impromptu and many people did not know anything was planned until the guns started to boom.

Alec Munro, who retired recently as chief engineer of the steamer Prince Rupert, left Vancouver by rail last night and will be arriving tomorrow at Burns Lake to join J. A. Lindsay and A. Ivarson on a fishing holiday in the Lakes district.

Tasty Strawberries In Britain Again

LONDON, (P) - Britons have written poems to their strawberries but now they are luxury fruits instead of regular summer treats. Land strawberries occupied grows acutelyneeded cabbages and potatoes and regeneration of strawberry stocks from a disease called Yellow Edge still is incomplete.

In 1924 strawberry acreage was estimated at 30 000 acres. Now it is only about 19,000. However, efforts are being made to increase it and the ministry of agriculture says "the next few years should see a strawberry renaissance that will go down in the history of British crop husbandry."

.. About WORK AND PRICES

Other day I was talking about getting a new 1948 car.

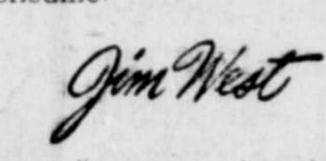

Something like a kid that can't wait for Christmas, I been doing some asking about prices and found they're a lot higher than I figured. 30 I began to find out why.

Seems one reason is that at about 40 per cent more pay for an eighthour day the employees in one big automobile factory are turning out only about two-thirds as many cars per eight-hour shift as they used to before the war. And that's in spite better machinery. The same story goes right around the circle of manufacturers.

Result is that all of us--workmen included-who want cars have to spend a lot more months of our work making the money to buy 'em.

The thought that comes to me is that if we figure we are getting prosperous by just having work and pay, we're kidding ourselves. We only get prosperous according to the amount of goods we turn out that we and others can buy at reasonable prices and consume
