This 20 MPH Speed Limit

TITY COUNCIL is about to endorse a revised traffic bylaw which includes many features vastly improved over the old bylaw, such as making jay-walking an offence, elimination of the anti-left turn rule at Third and McBride, and installation of quarter of a century. traffic lights.

But one feature of the newly drafted bylaw will not be swallowed well by motorists. It is the 20-mile an hour speed limit on downtown streets. We wonder if city council has given enough of the right kind of thought to this matter.

While there is theoretically a slight safety factor advantage for the lower of the two speeds-20 and 25 mph—it is doubtful whether it will prove so in practice.

On the contrary, when motorists are forced to drive at 20 mph or under at a risk of being fined for speeding, there is likely to be heavy traffic congestion at times which in itself is a danger factor.

It is quite tre, as some drivers have pointed out, that many modern cars do not attain high gear until a near 20 mph is reached. Driving up and down the streets continuously shifting gears or jogging along in second is not only a nuisance, hard on the car, but administration making this necessary appears to be lacking common sense.

Meanwhile, traffic enforcement officers are obliged to give everyone exceeding the 20 mph limit a speeding ticket. Such fines are pretty stiff today. To escape these heavy fines, a motorist may often have to slow down to much lower speeds.

It is quite true, as some drivers have pointed out, are necessary where there is much foot traffic of irresponsible children on the travelled portion of streets, as near school and playgrounds. Such zones, however, do not usually exceed two city blocks. For the safety of children, says the city council, is the new downtown speed to be imposed. This is a commendable motive, but it would appear much more effective if a training program for children and parents were launched, to whit:

That there are good sidewalks downtown and they are for use of pedestrians. Children can soon be taught not to dart onto busy traffic ridden

A Canadian city-Regina-raised its downtown speed limit several years ago shortly after its "unique" low of the 20 mph limit was referred to in a believe-it-or-not column.

G-A Trounce Hotelmen In Error Stricken Bill

The team with the youngest average age, spotted with rookies, last night cinched its pennant victory in the City Baseball League when Gordon & Anderson blasted Commercial Hotel 10-4.
