DISTRIBUTION OF WHITE PEOPLE.

One of the most important subjects of discussion at the Imperial Conference has been the question of migration within the Empire, says the London Times. At a meeting of the Women's Branch of the Overseas Settlement Office the Prime Minister of Australia declared that a better distribution of the white population is the greatest problem of all. With this view many of his colleagues of the Imperial Conference were clearly in cordial agreement. There was a strong feeling among them that in Great Britain, the most densely populated part of the great whole, present conditions involve a shortsighted waste of valuable human material—men and women and children who would be much better off if their lives were lived in more spacious surroundings, and might at the same time become a highly useful and strengthening factor in the industrial and economic policy of other British lands across the seas. The difficulties of the problem are many and great, but the movement towards solving it is making continuous progress. Mr. Bruce, in another part of his speech, was full of encouragement. He believes, he said, that at the present Imperial Conference more practical work has been done towards the solution of some of the problems of migration than at any previous time. In this opinion he was fully supported by Mr. Amery, who was careful to point out that migration must not be regarded here as an easy means of getting rid of the poor and unemployed, nor in the Dominions as a means of securing cheap and handy labor for the employer.

TRAGEDY OF UNEMPLOYMENT.

What is wanted is a more general disposition on the part of the British peoples overseas to initiate schemes of settlement on their own account, and a less critical attitude towards those proposed in this country. The fears to which that attitude, so far as it still exists, is due are easily understood. In particular the dread of the result of competition, or of the charges with which the community would be burdened in the case of British immigrants without the grit and energy to support themselves, is perfectly natural. No country can be expected to relish the possible aggravation of its own tragedy of unemployment. But neither of these potential evils really outweighs the benefits which would result in vast countries like Canada and Australia from steady influx of citizens of the right sort, and both can be provided against by a sound system of co-operation in their selection. Incidentally it may also be remarked that hardly could it be more prejudicial to the aim of securing these desirable immigrants than the custom of deporting the failures back to their own country, where their feelings of grievance must inevitably make them the worst possible advertisements of a new life overseas.

CANADIAN SCHEME CONSPICUOUS SUCCESS.

Of the reality and greatness of those advantages Lord Clarendon's report on Settlement in Canada is a satisfactory confirmation. The agreement of the "Three Thousand Families Scheme," which was negotiated in August, 1924, between J. A. Robb, Canadian Minister of Immigration and Colonization, and the British Government, has proved a conspicuous success. In the opinion of Lord Clarendon and Mr. Macnaughten, who have visited a considerable number of these settler families in their farms, it promises indeed to become the most successful effort in colonization undertaken by any government in modern times. The percentage of complete failures, says the report, is very small indeed. A few families have abandoned the scheme, and possibly two per cent have found work in the towns. But of the 1,504 families at present settled it is expected that between eighty and ninety per cent, given reasonably favorable conditions of climate and markets, will make good and remain permanently settled on the land as farmers. Two particularly satisfactory features of the scheme in working are the neighborly reception given to the settlers by the Canadian families in each district and "the rude health, the happiness, and the bright future prospects of the children." The scheme, in fact, effectually carries out the recommendation made some time ago by the Prince of Wales that, as far as possible, settlers in the Dominions should begin their life on the land while they are still young. In the case of the adult members of these families, the report lays it down as an axiom that the quality even more important than the experience is "the right spirit," which may be defined, perhaps, as the will to work. In that spirit, and with that will, there seems to be good reason to hope that similar schemes, based on the principle of families carefully chosen and provided with farms that are to a certain extent ready-made, may play a valuable part, both in Canada and in other parts of the Empire, in the process of effecting a better distribution of the white population.

"KEEPER OF BEES" TONIGHT'S PICTURE

Action and Romance of Gene Stratton Porter's Story Projected in Lovely Atmosphere

"The Keeper of the Bees," the delightful new novel by Gene Stratton Porter which appeared recently in McCall's and which is now sweeping the country in book form, will begin at the Westholme Theatre in its motion picture garb tonight, when it has its first showing locally. J. Leo Meehan, who made a tremendous reputation with "The Girl of the Limberlost," directed the new production, which threatens to hang up new records of popularity even for a story from the pen of such a famous writer as the late Mrs. Porter. Mr. Meehan was assisted on the picture by his wife, Jeannette Porter Meehan, daughter of the celebrated author, so it is but natural that the charm and color of the original story has been adhered to with fidelity throughout the screen version. The Southern California backgrounds against which the action and romance are projected prove lovely, and the work of little Gene Stratton Manroe, granddaughter of Mrs. Porter, is of particular interest in that she is the actual "Little Scout" of the story. The cast has been selected with fine discrimination and the direction stamps Mr. Meehan once more as one of those rare motion picture mentors who can take a good story and tell it on the screen exactly as it was in the book, without recourse to the conventional methods so often applied.

NORTHERN B.C. JUDGE'S SUBJECT

ROTARY CLUB HEARS INTERESTING ADDRESS FROM PRINCE GEORGE JUDICIARY

In addressing the Rotary Club yesterday, Judge Robertson of Prince George spoke of the necessity of the people of British Columbia becoming familiar with their own province. Ignorance was one of the greatest drawbacks to opening up the country the speaker said and, while one might travel through the country by train, the information secured in this manner was very trivial as compared with what was really necessary to understand the problems of the various localities. The central portion of this province was not fully informed concerning the coastal portion and the reverse was also true. Particularly was it true that the southern part of the province was ignorant of the northern and central part of the province.

In discussing the future of British Columbia, it was necessary, said the speaker, to consider ways of co-operating and assisting without being narrow or selfish. No country had ever been able to forge ahead which continued to hold a selfish viewpoint. "I believe in Northern British Columbia," continued the Judge, "with the completion of a railroad into the Peace River you will see the greatest development in the northern portion of the province." At the present time in that country the farmers were only cultivating a small portion of their land but this would be multiplied several times when they secured transportation. It would be of benefit to Prince Rupert and would undoubtedly help Prince George, no matter where the road eventually went, as at the present time one great difficulty in agricultural development in the Prince George territory was the lack of markets. Prince Rupert would be helped as a shipping port for this territory and this in turn would possibly assist the farmers in the interior in furnishing more markets for their produce.

BECOME FAMILIAR

Increased population in the province would only come as the people became familiar with the possibilities and then sought to induce others to locate here. First of all, however, there should be more widespread knowledge of the province. "It is hard to make the people of Vancouver believe in the possibilities of the central portion of the province," observed the judge, "but if it could be possible for them to travel into some of the northern parts then much would be accomplished in settling up our vacant spaces."

The speaker urged upon his hearers the value of co-operation in bringing about real development in the province. Each part must consider the province as a whole, and if this were done then the whole country would flourish. The speakers mentioned the value of the rising generation as the best kind of citizens. Many people had come to this province from foreign parts and their children were growing up and becoming imbued with our ideals of citizenship and were familiar with the province.

In referring to his position as judge when he was often called upon to listen to applications for citizenship, he remarked upon the pleasure it was to him to have a married man with a family apply to become a citizen. "They make the very best kind of settlers" was the brief manner in which His Honor referred to those who had chosen B.C. as their home. At the conclusion of the address, President C. H. Orme warmly complimented the judge on his excellent address and said that there was no more fitting subject upon which he might have talked.

SPORT CHAT

Hockey and prohibition have been the features of eastern papers for several weeks past. The prohibition election is now over and it is not probable that even the doings on Parliament Hill will in any way crowd hockey news into the background until about next March.

Roy Schalk in being named as successor to Eddie Collins as manager of the Chicago White Sox, inherits a tough task. Schalk takes the place of a star who has been an unqualified success as a big league pilot. Likewise he was popular with players and public.

The New York State Athletic Commission proposes a welterweight elimination tournament among four contenders to decide a challenger for the title held by Pete Lazo of Scranton, Pa. Joe Dundee of Baltimore would be matched with Mushy Calahan, Pacific Coast candidate, in one test tilt and Willie Harmon of New York, with Eddie Roberts of Tacoma, Wash., in the other under the plan suggested by the commission and likely to be carried out by Jess McMahon, matchmaker at Madison Square Garden. The winners would be brought together to determine the challenger.
