Britain Nearer Civil War Today Than Has Been for Centuries

Financial Secretary of the Treasury appeals to people of all parties to rally to Government to prevent disaster

LONDON, May 10.—Ronald McNeill, financial secretary of the treasury, in a letter read at a meeting of the Canterbury Conservative Association said: "This country is nearer actual civil war than it has been for centuries. Under the circumstances it is incumbent upon every loyal man and woman in the country, whatever their ordinary political opinions, to rally to the government support and enable them to avert unspeakable disaster. The avowed end of the general strike is to coerce the nation as a whole and produce such general paralysis as will force the government to surrender at its discretion to a combination of committees without a vestige of authority. If the government is forced to make such a surrender it would be the end of constitutional government in this country."

Byrd Flies Over North Pole and Returns to Spitzbergen Making Trip Under 16 Hours

Arrived Back at King's Bay Yesterday Afternoon at 4.20 and was Welcomed by His Rival Raold Amundsen

NEW YORK, May 10.—Lieutenant-Commander Byrd of the United States navy, flew over the North Pole yesterday, the Sunday New York Times and St. Louis Post dispatches announced. Byrd is the first to accomplish the feat. He made the flight in 15 hours 30 minutes, leaving the base at Spitzbergen yesterday morning, Greenwich time, and returning safely at 4.20 in the afternoon.

The entire population of King's Bay turned out to welcome the return of the aeroplane. Amundsen Ellsworth and the crew of their airship Norge, on which they plan a similar flight, greeted the commander upon his descent.

Dream of Boyhood

When Commander Richard Evelyn Byrd set sail from New York April 6, the occasion marked the realization of a dream which had been with him since boyhood days—an expedition of his own into the Arctic regions.

With him was Floyd Bennett, chief petty officer in the naval air service, who flew over 3,000 miles with the commander last year when the two accompanied the MacMillan party in the North. He became Byrd's "right hand" man and the two of them planned to share the most dangerous and important work of the expedition.

"Bennett is a man of the greatest energy, endurance and skill, both as a navigator and as a mechanic," Byrd wrote of him. "I would not like to be in the Arctic without him and I would take him before any other man in the world."

His expedition was described as the best equipped ever sent to the Polar regions. Two three-engine Fokker planes were stored away in the Chantier, the extra one for use in case of an accident to the first. Other supplies and equipment were assembled after much study and review of experiences of other Arctic explorers. Fifty-five persons were listed as members of the expedition.

Wanderlust

Wanderlust laid hold upon Byrd early in life, but instead of becoming its slave he so controlled and directed himself that his great ambition was achieved—an airplane expedition to the North Pole.

The same rare gift of persuasion which won Edsel Ford, John D. Rockefeller Jr., and others to support his polar flight, gained a notable decision back in 1901.

As a lad of twelve, Byrd wanted to make a trip around the world by himself and his arguments to a mother at first unwilling to grant permission proved successful. Starting from Richmond, Va., a city founded by his forefathers—Byrd went overland to San Francisco, where he caught a steamer for the Philippines. Then he travelled on coasting vessels from one Asiatic port to another.

After the European journey, he crossed on a liner to New York, where, as the youngest unescorted globe-trotter in the world, he was interviewed by no less than fifteen reporters.

Was Forestalled

There were the tales of Arctic explorations to excite his interest and he determined when fifteen years old to make an effort to discover the North Pole. Four years later, however, the youth, while a student at the Naval Academy, received a hard blow—Peary reached the North Pole.

Undismayed, Byrd refused to give up his hopes to explore the Arctic. To the audacity, self-reliance and sporting spirit which marked his trip around the world, he added science, techni-

Sporting Spirit

The sporting spirit had behind it a serious purpose. He wrote in the New York Times shortly before setting out on his expedition:

"The sporting element appeals strongly to me, but I am also deeply interested in proving that the airplane can do the job. I want to see it done for the prestige of aircraft. I believe that if we are successful in making flights even from Spitzbergen to Peary Land and back, much good will result from the consequent awakening of the public to the vast possibilities of the airplane."

Too Much Politics On Both Sides.

There is too much politics in connection with the government of the country. Those in authority think too often of the good of the party instead of the good of the country. Much time is wasted in Parliament in the effort to put themselves right with the country.

An example of this was seen at the week end at Ottawa. While it was a Conservative move in this case it is simply an example of the sort of thing that is done by men on both sides. Premier Oliver had gone to Ottawa to discuss the railway lands question with the government. No one knows better than he that when you go after something you concentrate on that alone and not mix it up with other issues.

With a view, apparently, to making cheap political election campaign material, Leon Ladner of Vancouver asked in the House if Mr. Oliver had made any representations in regard to the freight rates question.

It is easy to imagine the speech the member for South Vancouver will make on the hustings when the next campaign comes on. He will tell how the Premier of British Columbia spent so many weeks in Ottawa in the spring of 1926 and when a question was asked in the House it was discovered that he had not so much as mentioned freight rates to the government. It is because of the cheap politician that democracy is so often a failure.

Odd People Seen Everywhere.

Odd people are seen everywhere. People who are different from their fellows attract attention. Sometimes these odd folks are just freaks and sometimes they are geniuses.

As a rule people try to conform to the ways of their fellows in order that they may not be conspicuous. They want to be one of the flock just like all the other sheep. No matter what the rest of the flock do, they do the same. They conform to the fashion in dress, manners, customs and ideals. Just once now and then one person has sufficient initiative and courage to break away and do something original. When they do they become the subject of remark, mostly of ridicule but sometimes of admiration.

To be odd just for the sake of being odd is not desirable but to refuse to be conventional when necessary in the carrying out of a great or useful work is a mark of genius.

Clean Up And Paint Buildings.

Prince Rupert is much improved in the matter of cleanliness and also in the manner in which the buildings are kept. There is a general air of prosperity indicated by the appearance of the city.

There are, however, a few buildings that could be much improved by adding a coat of paint. The fact that other buildings are bright make them look all the more dingy. They are not a credit to the city in that they indicate a lack of public spirit.

Tremendous Power Organized Labor.

Organized labor, through its ability to control the food supply of the nation has a wonderful power but this power can be abused. Just now in the Old Country the struggle has very little to do with the matter of coal miners' wages. It is a struggle for supremacy. It is a fight to a finish to see whether organized labor can on any pretext tie up the food supply and business of the nation. In Russia strikes are prevented by the Soviets. In Italy Mussolini says whether a strike may take place. In neither of those countries have they the liberty that English speaking nations have. The only question is whether we are ready to give effect to that liberty.

RED BLOOD STORY GOLD RUSH DAYS

Professor Stanlaw, his wife and baby are members of a party enroute to the newly discovered Alaskan gold-fields. Others on the boat are Richard Steele, a gambler, Bob Dexter and Horseshoe Riley, prospectors. The boat is being driven ahead at break-neck speed and the boilers finally explode. Mrs. Stanlaw sees her husband killed and is persuaded by the gambler that her baby likewise has perished. Alone in Alaska she gradually drifts under Steele's influence and becomes a woman of the dance halls. The baby, rescued by Dexter and Riley grows into womanhood and is betrothed to Dexter.

Just before the wedding Dexter comes across Steele and his mistress. He informs her that Ruth is still living, but refuses to let the mother see her. Remorseful, she agrees and prepares to leave Steele and reform. The gambler, however, sensing what is transpiring endeavors to have the miner killed. The plot fails, but Dexter nearly loses his life in a terrific storm. Back home he and Riley talk things over and decide to bring mother and daughter together. Ruth learns her mother is alive and starts to her, but is lost on the edge of the sliding glaciers, Steele, endeavoring to escape, flees to the same spot, pursued by Dexter. Steele, cornered, is swept to death on the glaciers, just as Dexter rescues his sweetheart. This is the story pictured in "Cheechacos" here tonight.

GRAPHIC PICTURE OF CALIFORNIA EARLY DAYS OF GOLD RUSH

"The Splendid Road" is midweek Picture Here with Sacramento Featured

Set in California during the hectic gold rush days of '49, "The Splendid Road," which comes here for the mid-week showing, is one of the nearest bleedings of romance, beauty and suspense that have ever graced the screen.

Anna Q. Nilsson, Lionel Barrymore and Robert Frazer vie with each other in giving their interpretations.

"The Splendid Road" is the first picture based on the early history of the West that illustrates the fact that possibly more people came from the East by ship around Cape Horn than by covered wagon. It describes the hardships that they knew and with tenderness pays a glowing tribute to the character of the women who were among the early settlers.

A clipper ship of the period, 100 days out from Boston, serves as the background for the early action of the play, and the bustling little frontier town of Sacramento with its numerous gambling halls and its lawlessness, is the setting for the balance of the story. The historical flood which drove the squatters from their appropriated property after other means had failed is graphically pictured.

PRISON STORY BY BOOTH TARKINGTON

"Man Who Found Himself" is Tale of Banking and Crime and Disgrace

In "The Man Who Found Himself," his latest starring production for Paramount, a prison story by Booth Tarkington, Tom Meighan has the role of a happy-go-lucky son of a small town banker. His family is looked up to and respected in their community.

As things sometimes happen in a small town, the bank goes to the wall as a result of a "run" brought on when a rival banker, played by Frank Morgan, of stage fame, informs the bank examiners that there is some funny business going on in the Macaulay bank.

It develops that Tom's younger brother, because of the insistence of his pinheaded, luxury loving wife, had lost heavily in Wall Street, borrowed bank funds to "cover up" and then had gone to the rival banker for aid which was promised him. The other, however, takes advantage of the situation to get rid of a big business rival by informing bank officials of the irregularity.

To shield his brother, Tom goes "up the river" for a two year stretch. His term is barely half served when word comes that Lon Morris, the crooked banker, has talked Tom's fiancée, played by Virginia Valli, into marrying him. Tom, now a trusy, skips jail to prevent the wedding but arrives on the scene just too late. He returns to finish out his term, dead set against everything and everybody.

When, finally, he is freed, his family, not knowing the sacrifice he has made for them, are horrified lest his criminal past disgrace them. They urge him to leave town, virtually turning him out. He thinks even the girl has deserted him.

Tom then realizes the truth of a brother convict that it isn't the prison itself that's so bad, it's the stigma of jail, the sinister whispers that follow him everywhere. Embittered, he joins in with a couple of crooks determined to get revenge on the man who had "put him away." But the girl, who has always been true to him, seeks him out and turns his face again toward the light.

URGED TO BUY B.C. PRODUCTS

Manufacturing Plants of Province Employ 40,000 Workers and Output Large Sum

Five hundred and twenty different kinds of products are turned out by the factories of British Columbia today. Drawing raw materials from the mines, forests, waters and farms of Western Canada, our manufacturing plants, employing about 40,000 workers, are making quality products which were valued at over $190,000,000 last year.

Foodstuffs, machinery, furniture, clothing, beverages, metal goods, household requirements, drugs, chemicals, fish products and building materials are among the products of this Province and yet millions of dollars worth of similar goods are imported from foreign lands.

The B.C. Products Bureau of the Vancouver Board of Trade, which has been carrying on a campaign continuously since January 1921, with the idea of driving home to the public the great advantages of buying local products, has set aside the week May 10-17 as British Columbia Shopping Week with the idea of demonstrating the variety and quality of these products to British Columbia citizens.

Newspapers, wholesalers, retailers, hotels, restaurants, are all co-operating and it is expected that considerable impetus will be given to local industries through this effort.

ANOTHER QUEER FISH IS BROUGHT TO PORT

Member of Prowfish Family Taken Off Sitka by "Brothers"

Another strange fish has been brought to Prince Rupert by halibut fisherman. This time Captain S. Johansen of the "Brothers," Petersburg, has brought in a member of the Prowfish family which he caught off Sitka Sound in about sixty fathoms of water.

The specimen, which is 2 ft. 8 ins. long and 17 ins. in girth, is known scientifically as "Zaproria silenus" and belongs to the family called "Zaproridae." It is characterized by a short head with the nape not elevated and a forehead which is broad and abruptly convex in profile. The jaws and teeth are very heavily built.

The pectorals or front pair of fins are fairly long and rounded and are placed close behind the gills, midway between the back and belly. There are no ventral or hind pair of paired fins. The dorsal or back-fin, which has resulted in the name of "prowfish," is long and unoleched running from above the gill-openings to within a short distance of the tail. It is formed of moderately flexible rays and is a couple of inches in height.

The specimen has been turned over to the Fisheries Experimental Station where it will be preserved.

WESTVIEW PLAY GROUND OPENED

Gyro Club Turns Over Its Equipment to Mayor Newton For City of Prince Rupert

With some two or three hundred kiddies in attendance as well as a number of parents from the west end of town, ceremonies in connection with the opening of the Gyro Club's second playground in Prince Rupert at Westview Park took place on Saturday afternoon at 3 o'clock.

The presence of the Boys' Band was one of the outstanding features of the occasion. Led by bandmaster Wilson, this creditable aggregation of youngsters assembled at the corner of Third Avenue and Fulton Street and marched through a heavy rain shower but, as they arrived at Westview, the sun burst through again and blessed the afternoon's ceremonies with its beautiful rays. The band played a generous program of selections which was much appreciated by the crowd.

Stan Taylor, president of the Gyro Club, presided over the proceedings at the Park and called upon Police Magistrate McLymont to briefly address the youngsters. Mr. McLymont congratulated the Gyro Club on its program of playground work and gave the boys and girls some good advice as to their conduct, stressing the necessity of their getting to school and proper use of the facilities with which they were being provided.

President Taylor then presented to Mayor Newton the document deeding over from the Gyro Club to the City of Prince Rupert the equipment of the Westview Playground. The mayor also joined his congratulations to the Gyro Club and reiterated the advice that had already been given to the boys and girls. As he formally declared the park open, he flag was unfurled by President Taylor.

Ice cream was then served, to the youngsters and play started in full swing on the new ground. Assisting President Taylor in the afternoon's arrangement were members of the Gyro playground committee under Chairman Leo Waugh and other members of the club.

The Westview playground is the second one in the city that had been put in shape and equipped through the efforts of the Gyro Club. The first one at McLymont Park has been in operation for the past two years and

SPORT CHAT

That "insidious" pastime, Golf, seems to be a sort of melting pot for all other sports, as champion boxers, ball players, swimmers, racing drivers, tennis players, and what not all try to "double in brass" by successfully playing the Scotch game as well as their own. The number of men and women who play both tennis and golf is exceptionally large, and success in both of these two sports is more common than in any of the others. In any discussion of tennis and golf combined, the name of Mary Browne immediately comes to mind. The California girl's feat of reaching the final round of the American national women's golf tournament and the semi-final round of the national women's tournament only six weeks apart, has to parallel in sport history.

It is easier to name famous tennis players who have turned to golf than vice versa. That is probably because, as people grow older they naturally seek less active games. The famous Maurice McLoughlin is gradually developing himself into an excellent golfer. He shot a 68 on a par 72 course on the coast last year. Bill Tilden has tried his hand at golf without great success, and Suzanne Lenglen surprised the public a couple of years ago, by some good playing in a golf tournament for tennis players at St. Germain. Probably the best tennis player-golfer of all is Norman Brookes, the veteran Australian Davis Cup star. Brookes, a southpaw on the courts, is one of the best left-handed golfers to be found anywhere in the world.

As for golfers turned net stars, Cyril Tolley, former English amateur golf champion, is the most famous. He announced last year that he was going to abandon the links for the courts, in hopes of winning a Davis Cup match for England. He entered his first tennis tournament under the nom de guerre of "A. Birdie," which really should have disqualified him from future competition. It was his decision as a linesman in the famous Wills-Lenglen match at Cannes that so rankled the American player. Miss Joyce Wethered, the great British woman's golf champion, also expressed her intention last year of withdrawing from golf to enter tennis tournaments.

Soviet System as it is Working Today Appears Little Different from the Old Fashioned Method

There is Some Competition Between Retailers Seen on Streets: Three-quarters of Trade in Hands of State Indirectly: Inefficiency Common

(By Arthur Ransome in "Manchester Guardian")

There are disagreements even in the ranks of the Communists as to the proper description of the economic system of Russia. In the country the bulk of production is that of small farmers tilling land with the help of their families. On one side of this main body of producers is a much smaller one of farmers who cultivate with the help of hired labor in addition to that of their own relations, and on the other side is a body of peasants who, being without beasts and instruments of tillage, seek employment, sometimes earning by that means the use of beasts and implements to till land for themselves. There is also a certain amount of co-operative agriculture, though not enough to affect this general picture. In the towns it is much harder to obtain a clear view of what is happening.

Streets Like Others

According to Trotsky (and I have examined several other sets of figures but found none that differ materially from his) the State has in its hands four-fifths of industry, three-quarters of internal trade, nearly 100 per cent of banking and of foreign trade, and 100 per cent of transport. But when you go out into the streets of Moscow you see very much what you see in the streets of any European capital. There are crowded shops, open markets, street hawkers and all the bustle that we associate with competition. There is a tremendous amount of noisy advertisement, electric signs at night, flaming banners announcing restaurants, cinema

Human Nature Wins

The reason for this is that experience has taught the Communists that, with the human material at their disposal, they cannot do without the two main motives that stimulate activity elsewhere—competition and personal interest. From the moment that the civil war ended and Russia's economic system ceased to be that forced since the beginning of history on any beleaguered community (the flying of a red instead of a national flag by that community did not in any essential way affect the principle of the system) the existence of an open internal market compelled the State to compete with the private producer and trader. The need of a stable currency meant the need to do away with the covering of deficits by issuing paper money, State production and trade had to show a profit. The State found itself in the possession of a huge mass of moribund nationalised industry. It split this up into "trusts," and after a most unsuccessful attempt to retain close control over them turned them loose to shift for themselves and to account only for results. Credit for their operations comes from the State banks. The trusts work exactly like industrial combines in other countries, with the sole exception that as their credit does not come from private shareholders but from the State no private persons can sit at home and receive incomes in exchange for lending their money. The trusts not only make but sell. Their shops are in competition with the shops of private traders and with the shops of the co-operative societies, which also obtain their credit from the State. Just as payment by piece-work gives personal interest in production to the workers, so in selling a commission on sales turns the indifferent bureaucrat of the State shop of 1921 into the keen salesman of 1926.

The System

The system may as a whole be roughly described as follows:—The trusts, leviathans working for themselves and indirectly for the State, seek to increase production and lower its cost. The trade unions defend the interests of the workers and prevent the trusts from lowering costs at the expense of wages. The banks, controlling credit, can press on the loud or soft pedal with regard to individual industries, and so compel industry to follow more or less closely the lines laid down by those whose business it is to work out the State plans. But the trusts and the unions and the banks have Communists as their leaders and directors, and these meet in the party on another plane than that on which they wage their competitive warfare, and are thus continually kept aware of the ultimate community of interest between the component parts of the system. The effect of that is a slightly better lubrication between different parts of the system than is possible in a system in which a man's activities more directly define his class and in which economic friction between classes is more easily reflected in political friction. There is, certainly, better mutual understanding between interests immediately conflicting but ultimately identical than we are accustomed to see.

Inefficiency

In the matter of efficiency it is very hard to draw the line between inefficiency due to the cumbersome working of this system and the inefficiency apparently natural to Russians. So many of the motives of capitalism are enjoying free play in Russia today that one is inclined to think that the inefficiency, which it is impossible not to notice, is due not to lack of these motives but to the Russians themselves. One is inclined to wonder whether there would not be even more of it if, for example, the whole inefficiency of an industry, instead of being concentrated in a single trust, were spread out through the myriad offices of individual firms. It is perhaps more visible when concentrated, and so, in the long run, more capable of elimination.

Its Defects

In one respect this system is more vulnerable than our own. A crisis in any particular industry here affects those employed in that industry, and to a less degree all others directly or indirectly dependent upon it. In Russia a crisis in any industry affects the whole system, because it affects the general buying and selling plan of the State. A vivid example of this has just been given by the overestimate last year of the probable corn export. The result of that was an over-lavish import plan. These two things put together have brought a negative balance of foreign trade. It is not merely the farmers who suffer. The State as a whole is in the position of a middleman who has bought more than he has sold. The very currency is in danger. In all directions Geddes axes flash and fall, and it often happens that the tree that the woodman will not spare is one that would later have been particularly useful. Imports have to be cut down, and the State finds itself affected economically. Constantinople crumbles at being unable to send Russia oranges. Persia thinks herself hardly treated because of a withdrawal of the permission to Persian merchants to bring some goods into Russia without licences. And all this because peasants made up their minds that they would get better prices by waiting, since it was very clear that the government wanted to buy their corn.

Not Enough Trained Men

Naturally, there are not as yet enough technically equipped Communists to fill the boards of the trusts. There are, however, enough to ensure adequate Communist representation on each board. In 1925 of 639 directors, 313 were Communists, of whom 228 had themselves been workmen. Every Communist director means some saving of money to the concern in which he is employed, because, in spite of their recognition that mankind in general has to be bribed by an appeal to his personal interests in order to induce it to do its best, the party has not abandoned the hope that at some future time man will rise to the level of the ant and work for the community. The party calls upon its members to prove this by self-sacrifice. No Communist, no matter what his post may earn more than 225 roubles a month (approximately $250 a year). There is no limit to the earnings of non-Communists. A "Bourgeois" specialist may get any salary that his employers think that his knowledge is worth to them. Thus in a trust or a bank you will find a Communist director with a salary of $250, and several specialists, his subordinates, with salaries of £700 or £1,000, or even more. These latter can dine in restaurants that a Communist cannot visit without putting himself under suspicion of using money that is not his.

GYRO PLAYGROUNDS.

Editor Daily News.

Saturday when I was at the opening of the new Westview playground, I thought it was too bad that the children did not appreciate more the work the Gyro Club was doing for them. There was a fairly good crowd turned out, but I doubt if they will patronize it very long. I am talking from what I know at the McClymont Park. It has been open since the 15th of March, and very few children have been down. Last Friday and Saturday were beautiful days, but it didn't bring any more around. So it is not very encouraging.
