Toronto Argos Smash Eskies In Grey Cup Final

FEDOSOFF

CHAMPIONS—Toronto Argonauts crushed Edmonton Eskimos 22-11 today in the Canadian football championship Grey Cup final. This action photo shows how the Argos ran the Sarnia Imperials 34-15 in the eastern final three days before today's classic to take the Grey Cup championship. Easterners Win 21-11 For 9th Championship

TORONTO (CP)—Toronto's powerful Argonauts roared from behind to whip Edmonton Eskimos 21-11 and win their ninth Grey Cup before a record crowd of 27,395 here this afternoon.

The Argonauts, who blew hot and cold in their Big Four League games this season, came up hot when the blue chips were down.

Except for brief periods, they outplayed the Eskimos, seeking their first victory in the classic.

The Argos, classy and powerful under the coaching of Frank Clair, formerly of the University of Buffalo, trailed 5-0 at end of first quarter but came back with two converted touchdowns and a field goal to lead 15-5 at the half.

They gave up another touchdown to the green and gold club, the Cinderella kids of the west who came east in Edmonton's third search for the cup and met their third heart-breaking failure.

The Eskimos' second touchdown brought them to within four points of the Argos—15-11—but the quick-striking Toronto club, taking advantage of a misplay by quarter Claude (Cobra) Arnold midway through the final quarter, exploded for their third and final major of the afternoon.

The play that broke the backs of the Edmonton players—and the hearts of their gaily-clad 1500 supporters from the Alberta capital—came after Ed Soergel, Argonaut defensive star, intercepted a third-down Arnold pass at Edmonton 37.

With Edmonton pass defenders covering the end, Al Bruno, number one target for quarter Knobby Wirkowski's passes, big Zeke O'Conner from Dallas Texas streaked into the clear to snare a forward at Edmonton 8, and prance over with Eskimo players far behind him.

That was all for the Eskimos. Great play by Rod Pantages, former Montreal Alouette back, set up the Eskimos for their first quarter touchdown. He took a short pass from Arnold and scampered 63 yards down the touch line before he was spilled out of touch on the Toronto 10-yard line.

Senator Hits At RCMP Ways Of Policing

OTTAWA (CP)—A Nova Scotia Liberal senator claims that the centre of ambition for the RCMP is to get a conviction against an accused person "at any event."

Senator Donald MacLennan, 75-year-old lawyer, said in a Senate committee Wednesday he hopes something will be done to see "that the poor devil of a prisoner is given a chance."

Senator MacLennan raised the matter during discussion of amendments to the criminal code which contain a provision placing the RCMP, a civilian force, on a military basis in respect to maintaining discipline.

Commissioner L. H. Nicholson, head of the RCMP, declined to comment on Senator MacLennan's statement. He said only that "the work we do speaks for itself."

Rail Union Rejects Wage Conciliation

MONTREAL (CP)—Seventeen railway brotherhoods today officially announced their rejection of the majority findings of a federal conciliation board in the big railway wage dispute.

At the same time, the unions indicated they were willing to resume negotiations with the railroads in an effort to reach an agreement.

A statement by Frank H. Hall, chief union spokesman, said 17 international and two national brotherhoods have advised Labor Minister Gregg of their rejection of the majority report, which recommended a 16-cent-an-hour wage increase for 144,000 non-operating railway workers.

There was no immediate railway reaction to the union suggestion that negotiations might be continued.

Ottawa Next Stop Say Socred Leaders

Bennett, Low Address Crowded West Coast Socred Convention

VANCOUVER.—Premier Bennett Friday told the annual meeting of the B.C. Social Credit League that "Ottawa is our next objective."

In this declaration he had support from national leader Solon Low who, from the same platform, said: "You people have started the winds blowing and they are blowing our way... I wouldn't be surprised to see Social Credit march to control of the House of Commons."

The convention hall was crowded with 600 Social Credit members from every city and hamlet in B.C. who brought with them hundreds of resolutions.

"Within a few months we will face a test in B.C.," said Bennett, "and the result will shake the whole of Canada. We want 48 seats in the next house."

Pulp Union Leader Enters Civic Race

Newest entry in the Dec. 11 aldermanic contest is Percy L. Downing, 31, second vice-president of the pulp and sulphite union local at Watson Island.

A slinger at Columbia Cellulose Co. Ltd. pulp mill, Mr. Downing has been an active member of the Parent-Teacher Associations, here. He came to Terrace at an early age and was educated there.

He is a veteran of Rocky Mountain Rangers and served in western Europe and England with No. 45 Army Transport for 3½ years.

In announcing he would contest an aldermanic seat, Mr. Downing said: "I believe in the future of the city, an adequate sewage system, a pure water supply, a fair deal in the power question, and I support the school bylaw."

Japan Won't Send Troops To Korea War

TOKYO.—Japan won't send its troops to Korea even if the United States requests it, Prime Minister Shigeru Yoshida told the Japanese House of Councilors.

He said no such request had been made. Even if it is, Yoshida said, he did not believe Japanese public opinion would allow the troops to be sent.

Waterfront Disaster Averted

Firemen Halt Blaze on Fishboat

A fire with a potential of destroying the entire waterfront was nipped in the bud last night by fast working firemen as they doused flames in the interior of a fish boat.

Damage to the Miss Jean, a Vancouver packer, would exceed $1000, Fire Chief Earl Becker said today.

Smoke was spilling from an open skylight when the firemen rushed to the scene at a few minutes before 10 p.m. The packer was docked at Government Wharf, alongside Bacon Fisheries.

Hero of the firefighting crew was W. H. (Buster) Hill, assistant fire chief, who donned a gas mask and entered the smoke-spewing vessel first with fire hose in hand, looking for possible inmates. No one was inside.

Fire was contained mainly in the fore-castle among crew members' bunks, which were all but destroyed. Flames were caught just in time to prevent them reaching the boat's gas tank and oil storage.

"It could have been very serious," said Chief Becker. "If the dock had caught fire it would be hard to control."

Alarm was turned in by a watchman at nearby Atlin Fisheries Ltd.

Captain of the Miss Jean is Paul Johanson; owner is Jimmy Fiedler.

New B.C. Area For Salmon To Be Opened

OTTAWA (CP)—Fisheries Minister Sinclair said Friday the British Columbia coastal area between Satellite Channel and Comox will be opened for salmon fishing between Dec. 15 and Dec. 31.

Replying to a question in Commons by J. L. Gibson (Ind.-Comox-Alberni), Sinclair said that because of summer stoppages of fishing there had been sufficient escapement of chum salmon and it was therefore decided to open the area for fishing during the latter part of next month.

St. Laurent Addresses Ministers

LONDON (CP)—Commonwealth ministers in an atmosphere of "greatest cordiality" outlined their ideas Friday on how to strengthen sterling by expansionist rather than restrictionist means.

Prime Minister St. Laurent, representing the senior Dominions, was the first speaker among the countries outside the United Kingdom. It was understood he spoke for about 20 minutes, largely reiterating Canada's frequently expressed desire for conditions which would lead to the freest possible trade.

R. A. Butler, Britain's Chancellor of the Exchequer, opened the second day of the nine-country conference, officially described as the most important since the Ottawa conference on tariffs in 1932.

Butler was understood to have expressed the feeling, that the sterling area, having taken emergency measures at the finance ministers' conference last January, now were ready to participate in a general movement toward sloughing off the shackles on international trade.

Meat Prices To Rise—Due Embargo Lift

VANCOUVER (CP)—Meat packers here predicted Friday increased prices will follow lifting of the U.S. embargo on Canadian livestock shipments March 1.

"If we can ship to the U.S. freely, it may tend to push up the market," one packer said.

Canadian meat prices dropped when the ban was first imposed last February following the outbreak of foot and mouth disease on the prairies.

Woodworkers Deadlocked In Wage Talks

VANCOUVER (CP)—The southern interior Lumber Manufacturers' Association said Friday it has notified 30 IWA local unions that it will terminate wage negotiations at noon Saturday unless an agreement has been reached.

The union said its policy committee has been called for Sunday to "decide how to meet this threat."

The association said its members would not operate without a signed wage contract.

Workers are seeking a 3½-cent hourly wage boost while operators are holding out for continuing the present wage agreement.

Next Meeting May Decide IWA Wage Talks

VANCOUVER.—Decision will be made at a meeting here Dec. 13 as to whether the woodworkers' wages contract will be reopened.

District President Stewart Alsbury of the International Woodworkers of America (IWA) said the decision would be made at a special quarterly council meeting.

Under terms of the summer strike settlement, the contract may be opened for further negotiations if asked for by workers or management.

Ike Should Visit Alaska, B.C. Too

A NOVEL but by no means implausible suggestion has been made by the Ketchikan Alaska Chronicle which might well have an important bearing on northern B.C.

Remarking that defence would, of course, be the General's main interest, the paper suggests he might also wish to see some of the projects which are contributing to Alaskan development.

"Some of the long range projects such as a railroad to Alaska, a car ferry between Prince Rupert and Haines and a railroad to the Bering sea coast may want to have studied by experts," the Chronicle observes.

"But if he could see first hand some of the projects already under way—the dock being completed for the pulp mill here, the burgeoning tunnels for the pipeline, the charts on water power potential at Taiya, or what the new highway system has done for the scenic Kenai peninsula, he might develop some of the enthusiasm that Alaska needs in the White House."

Most of the projects mentioned are also of close concern to the northern part of this province. In the Taiya proposal alone, which involves the Aluminum Company of America, there is an issue which promises to become one of great international importance.

If the General were to visit Alaska, he would no doubt find it edifying to discuss these matters with Canadian authorities, who should be of cabinet rank. Defence Minister Claxton and Trade and Commerce Minister Howe are two who at once come to mind.

The idea is not nearly so far-fetched as it may appear at first glance. The problems of defence would by themselves warrant such a meeting. In the event of war, Canadians and Americans would have to work in tight co-ordination through this area.

The Chronicle having urged Alaska's governmental leaders to sound out the President-elect on the subject, it would not be amiss if the Canadian government maintained close touch with our neighbors to the north with a view to inviting the General into Canadian territory should the occasion arise.

Sooner or later the U.S. President-to-be is certain to visit Canada in any case. With the threatening situation in Asia now occupying much of his interest, there is surely no more appropriate point at which to make his first visit than in the area which would become the front line of the continent if the threat ever materialized.

UNDER OUR ROOF

By JOHN STURDY

Ever since I received that letter from P. Potts, janitor in my old apartment house Back East, asking if I knew the whereabouts of Hamish and Col. S. Skeffington-Smutts (Ret.)—well, of course, I know their whereabouts. They're right here, living in our house, along with Little Augie and Anastasia the Colonel's wife, and—where was I?

Oh, yes; well, reading Mr. Potts' letter got me thinking about the old days Back East in the apartment house, and started me wondering about Ian Igfish and the Twittle's maid, Esmeralda, and whether or not they were still pledging their love at the incinerator chute.

I hope they are, because it always struck me that a romance that could blossom over a garbage pail was really one of the great love stories of all time.

Ian Igfish was a young man who lived in the apartment next to mine, and he was a very shy person, I remember. The Twittles lived on the same floor, at the opposite end of the hall, and the incinerator chute was in-between, at the head of the stairs. Ian Igfish was so shy he had to have an excuse for everything, and the incinerator provided it. It was there that he used to meet his love, the fair Esmeralda.

Esmeralda would come out of the Twittles' apartment carrying a pail of garbage, and Ian would meet her in the centre of the hall, and they would stand there together with the pail between them, gazing soulfully into each other's eyes as they ramed bundle after bundle of garbage down the chute.

Sometimes they wouldn't talk at all, their love was so overpowering, and when at last the pail was empty and the door of the chute was finally closed, they would simply clasp hands for a moment of unspoken bliss and then return to their respective apartments.

That pail was the most important thing in their lives. The length of their tryst depended on how much was in the pail, and sometimes I would hear Ian Igfish complain sorrowfully: "Oh, Esmeralda, only one tiny bundle today!" and Esmeralda would explain that the Twittles were dining out a lot and the scrapings were consequently very lean.

I remember the time, too, when the Twittles entertained at a large dinner party, and later Esmeralda appeared with a radiant face and carrying, not one, but two pails. I'll never forget the wonderful glow in Ian Igfish's eyes when he saw those two pails. The lovers were so long at the incinerator that time that I thought that Ian Igfish would get to the point of proposing. (He was very shy, as I have said.)

And I shall never forget that terrible period when Esmeralda didn't appear at the incinerator for several days. Poor Ian was in anguish, and when at last he did encounter Esmeralda his shyness dropped away in a sudden and terrible burst of jealousy.

"Somebody else has been helping you empty the garbage!" he accused.

Well, it took quite a time for Esmeralda to convince him that she was not meeting another man at the incinerator in off-hours, and that she had been laid up with a cold.

A BIT FUR

And that was not the only time when the course of true love struck a reef. I happened to be climbing the stairs this day when Esmeralda appeared with an overflowing pail which contained, she told Ian, a lot of old bits of fur that Mrs. Twittle wanted to throw away, and of course Ian Igfish was deliciously happy as they started to push all that junk down the chute.

Then Ian suddenly asked: "Did you hear something Esmeralda?"

"No," she said. "What was it?" "It sounded like a cry," he said. "Just after I put that last piece of fur down the incinerator."

It was just at that moment when Mrs. Twittle suddenly appeared in hallway.

"Esmeralda," she demanded, "have you seen our cat?"

Well, of course there was a lot of screaming and wailing, with Esmeralda accusing Ian Igfish of murdering the cat, and Mrs. Twittle accusing both of them, and then Hamish (he was the assistant janitor then) appeared from the basement carrying a slightly bedraggled kitten for the scruff of the neck.

"You are not permitted," he announced sternly, "to put tin cans and cats down the incinerators."

Yes, sir, that was one time when romance nearly got all burned up.

What Nehru Told Me

IN THE PARLIAMENT of India Mr. Nehru has scored a triumph to date.

His impassioned plea to the west, to accept India's plan for peace in Korea, has won him the greatest ovation of his career.

It was a lovely day last year when I interviewed Mr. Nehru on such matters. The sunny winter air in New Delhi was as stimulating as fine wine. Guards at the main door of the parliament buildings quickly checked my papers. One chatted as we walked the circular corridor.

A cabinet meeting was still on, and there was such silence in the secretaries' office that I could hear the clock tick. The phone rang and a woman wanted to know if it was true Mr. Nehru took only lemon in his tea. Yes, it was, the smiling young man replied.

OUTSIDE Mr. Nehru's office stood the handsome guard I ever saw. He was dressed in scarlet, gold and white uniform, presumably as in British raj days.

The first thing that struck me about Mr. Nehru was that, in Indian clothes, he is much more impressive than in business suits of the west. He was wearing a knee length grey tunic, tight at the neck, with white breeches, tight on his lower legs. He has clear tan skin, and sad penetrating eyes, which change color a bit flashing from brown to blackish according to his mood. I noticed his hands, artistic, expressive.

A servant brought us fruit juice in plastic mugs. I asked him, among other things, about Korea. He smiled rather wistfully and said:

"No, India is not going to say 'we told you so' about things in Korea."

India had been right when she warned the western nations they should not send their armies north of the 38th parallel, right again when she warned them China would come into the war if they drove right to China's border, and then right again when she had warned the temporarily victorious Chinese that THEY too should stay north of the fatal parallel.

But I had a new respect for the Indian Prime Minister's MILITARY grasp when he said:

"Of course the reality is that THEY could drive the west clean out of Korea whenever they chose to pay the heavy price of doing it."

OTTAWA DIARY

By Norman M. MacLeod

The most surprised people on Parliament Hill these days are the senators. They find themselves leading really useful and almost strenuous lives once more.

When they get used to it, they think they're going to like it. At least it rescues them from the sense of inferiority which used to overwhelm them when they would have to spend a considerable portion of their time defending themselves against charges of laziness, or of being as much value to Parliament as the legendary fifth wheel to a coach.

What has happened is that, while the House of Commons is spending its time in day-long chatter over the Speech from the Throne, the Senate has been given the legislative ball to carry. For the first time in history, the government has seen fit to initiate the bulk of its sessional program of legislation in the Upper Chamber.

Fourteen measures have been given first reading so far, and more are to follow. The Senators have been told, figuratively if not in so many words, to wake up from their day-dreaming and step on the gas, because the government wants the measures all passed by the Christmas adjournment.

Ostensibly the reason the government is putting the senators back into their legislative overalls is the Coronation. The idea is that if the sessional program of legislation can be speeded up, proration will be possible that much sooner in the New Year. And the ministers and other members of the parliamentary party scheduled to go to London will be able to make their plans in orderly fashion.

That's the government's story, and it could be perfectly true. But the Opposition parties are more than a little suspicious. There's another event in the cards for 1953 in addition to the Coronation—namely, a general election. And they recognize that a desire on the part of the government to be in a position to call a surprise vote in the spring would explain equally with the Coronation the legislative haste now being shown.

From the government's standpoint the obvious advantage of a spring election would be to shorten the organization period available to the Opposition parties. But there is an offsetting disadvantage of which the Liberal strategists are also aware. That is the fact that a seasonal unemployment is usually at its peak during the very weeks that the campaign would be in progress. That's a factor that's unlikely to be overlooked in any political plans which the ministry may make.

Attend CHURCH SUNDAY PRESBYTERIAN LIQUOR BRIEF

Exercise of local option on the establishment of beer and liquor outlets, and a government educational program on the effects of drinking, are among the points recommended in a brief submitted by the Presbyterian Church to the B.C. liquor inquiry commission.

The brief was drawn up at a meeting of the Church in Vancouver at which Prince Rupert was represented by Rev. E. A. Wright, DD, Presbyterian minister here. It reads as follows:

The Presbytery of Westminister of the Presbyterian Church in Canada met within Central Presbyterian Church on November 6, to consider the liquor problem and endorsed the following brief which is being presented to this Liquor Inquiry Board for your consideration.

"We recognize that the use or abuse of liquor has been a problem of many centuries. We feel that the various attempts to control the consumption of intoxicating liquor have all exhibited weaknesses, nor did the attempts made recently to control it through total prohibition meet with the success anticipated by its advocates.

"We are convinced that the only ultimate solution to this problem is the regeneration and re-education of the individual person by the grace of God. However, we realize that the recommendations of this Presbytery must give directive toward the amelioration of the present conditions under which malt and spirituous liquors are served.

"Therefore, believing that the present system of beer parlors is not conducive to moderation we recommend: "First, that a suggestion from your august body be directed to the Government toward the reform of the present system of handling beer outlets. We suggest that your committee allow no more than one drink per person on the table at any one time, thus forbidding bottles of any kind on, under or around the table.

"Second, an honest effort be made to control the sale of liquor to minors. We suggest that your committee allow no more than one drink per person on the table at any one time, thus forbidding bottles of any kind on, under or around the table.

"Third, no cheques of any kind be honored or cashed in (Continued on Page 4)

P-TA Council Holds Panel Discussion on Delinquency

Advice that there is no truant officer in Prince Rupert created surprise at the monthly meeting of the Borden Street School Parent-Teacher Association. The observation was made by J. S. Wilson, school principal, in the course of a panel discussion on juvenile delinquency which was specially arranged for the meeting.

Mr. Wilson explained that by means of withholding mothers' allowances, social welfare officials sometimes brought pressure to bear on parents who failed to send their children to school regularly.

Presenting the legal side of the problem, Alastair Fraser said there was need for insistence by the public that the provisions of the law be carried out.

Pointing out limitations of the law as a deterrent to juvenile delinquency, he stressed that effectiveness of legislation is largely determined by the support it receives from the community.

The parents' viewpoint was presented by R. C. Telford who remarked that some parents disregarded their obligations to their own children and this, in turn, reflected on the behavior and attitudes of the neighbors' children. He emphasized the importance of parental influence in the whole problem of juvenile delinquency.

In outlining the community's position in the matter, Rev. L. G. Sieber pointed out that while there are organizations which can exert good influence, many children do not belong to these organizations which thus limits the effectiveness in this respect.

In speaking for the teachers, Mr. Wilson stressed that careful character building was es-

Credit Manager Tells Group Make Customer Feel at Ease

Importance of making a new customer feel at ease and the value of making prompt use of the credit Bureau were stressed by David Robins, credit collection manager of Frizzell's Motor Products, in a talk last night to the Retail Credit Grantors Association.

Speaking at the Civic Centre, at the association's first dinner, Robins said when a new customer asks to be put on credit, do not try to talk to him about it on the sales floor," Mr. Robins cautioned.

"The credit grantor should talk to him alone in a quiet booth or office and should take pains to put him at his ease. Once the information has been obtained, there is no difficulty in slipping out for a few moments to check it by phone with the local Credit Bureau."

After the terms of payment have been arranged, it is helpful for both parties concerned to go over them again before the customer leaves, Mr. Robins advised.

The speaker was introduced by Ralph Hood, chairman of the program committee. Bill Bryan was in the chair and Mrs. Catherine Laurie was secretary.

It was agreed at the meeting that Prof. L. M. Vukelich, of the UBC Department of Commerce, should be invited to Prince Rupert next May to give a course in credit handling and salesmanship. This would be the second visit for Prof. Vukelich whose course here last summer proved a popular feature.

High Standard Adjudication For Festival

Next year's music and drama festival in Prince Rupert will receive a high standard of adjudication in the music division, according to a letter received by the Music and Drama Festival Association.

Adjudicator Mrs. Mary Wood wrote in her letter read at the monthly meeting of the association:

"The Canadian Federation of Music Festivals is endeavoring to establish some sort of uniform marks—I am not a high marker, for my standard is high, and I believe in having to measure up. According to the advised scale, 75 represents a good average performance, 80 to 85—above average; 85 to 90—extremely good; 90—excellent (much above usual).

"I frequently mark in the late 60's and early 70's—where, for instance, one gets fair accuracy, but not much musicality. Most experienced adjudicators are able to see behind what is actually heard, as regards technique, musicianship, etc. This is always taken into account where championship classes, trophy or ferry classes are concerned. I feel people have a right to know what a mark stands for. Of course, adjudicators differ considerably as to marks, but where one is interested in raising standards there is only one thing to do—keep marks down, unless the music really comes off."

Mrs. Wood expressed keen interest in the Prince Rupert Festival syllabus, and congratulated the syllabus committee.

A music library will be set up in the Association, available for reference to music teachers intending entering pupils in the festival.

Despite care in preparing the syllabus, and proof reading afterwards, Mrs. E. W. Becker, president, reported some errors. The name of the scholarships awards committee chairman, Mrs. W. S. Kergin, had been omitted. In Class 57, the composer's name should read "Kuhlau." And it was decided that the elocution classes should be chosen, preferably from Canadian authors, but not limited to Canadian authors.

The syllabus of the Saskatoon Christmas Carol Festival, held in 1951, was discussed by the meeting, with the feeling that a similar carol festival might perhaps be successfully instituted here. This might well be a popular project for 1953, said members.

BLACKWOOD on Bridge

By EASLEY BLACKWOOD

Even Mr. Champion Falls Into Bidding Booby Trap

Based on the bidding, Mr. Champion tried a commendable line of play for his six diamond contract. Unfortunately for him, however, one of the bids he depended upon for his analysis of the hand was Miss Brash's two spade call. As you see, she had little excuse for entering the auction at all. Basing your play on her bidding is like building a house on quicksand.

The king of clubs was opened and when he saw the dummy, Mr. Champion laid out his partner in a few choice phrases for bidding four hearts. He had counted on some high card strength in the heart suit. Even so, he noted, there was a chance for 12 tricks if Miss Brash held just two hearts, including an honor.

He won the first trick with dummy's ace of clubs and promptly led another club, ruffing it with the ace of diamonds. He picked up the outstanding diamonds in two leads. Now he led the ace and another heart, which would have enabled Mr. Champion to make his contract easily. Finally, however, he played low and Miss Brash was in with the queen.

Mr. Champion softened a little. The heart distribution he had hoped for was actually a fact. He went so far as to manage a friendly glance at Mr. Muzzy. Undoubtedly he had Miss Brash in a bad spot. She was out of both red suits. If she returned a club he would ruff in his hand and discard the five of spades from the board. If she returned a spade away from her king, he would let it ride to the queen in dummy.

It was difficult, of course, for Miss Brash to lead away from the king of spades as she did not hold that card. She led a low spade. Mr. Champion ducked, and Mr. Abel took the setting trick with his lone king.

Again Mr. Champion's mood changed — this time for the worse. "How can I win against people who don't even know how to bid?" he snapped. "Who wants you to win?" inquired Miss Brash sweetly.

Farmers Seek To Identify Storage Eggs

VANCOUVER — The B.C. Federation of Agriculture will be looking to approve a resolution calling for the marking of cold storage or processed eggs.

The Federation opened its two-day annual meeting here today with 35 resolutions prepared for discussion, touching on many vital agricultural problems.

The resolution on egg marking was sponsored by the Cowichan Agricultural Association, Vancouver Island Poultry Co-op, Langley Poultry Producers and the Maple Ridge Farm Institute. Storage stock was blamed for widespread consumer dissatisfaction. The consumer has no way of telling a storage egg from a new-laid one.

The egg raisers are also asking for a floor price. One recommended floor is 42 cents a dozen for the producers for Grade A eggs.

The meeting also discussed the use of poison sprays, day-labor time, the sales tax, and a subsidy on lime for potato growers.

Application To Import Gas To Be Reviewed

SPOKANE, Wash. (AP)—The spokesman Review says the Federal Power Commission has agreed to reopen the whole question of importing Canadian natural gas for the U.S. Pacific Northwest.

The newspaper says that although the FPC's legal staff last year recommended dismissing the applications of four companies that seek to import the gas, the commission has decided to start from scratch.

Last week British Columbia's minister, Robert Somers, said the United States will not get water rights on the Estey River system in B.C. unless it agrees to take natural gas from the Peace River area.

A Washington dispatch the other day quotes a "commission spokesman" as saying it may take six months to go through all the evidence.

Argument Rages in Britain Around Queen's Head on Coin

LONDON (Reuters)—Argument rages furiously in Britain around the head of the Queen.

Foot Lights

By LILIAN MILLER

Prince Rupert Little Theatre's coming production, "Ask Me No Questions" is both hair-raising and hilarious.

Perry Thornhill, a well-known mystery novelist, becomes involved in terrifying situations because he cannot control his impulse to lie. For help he summons the psychiatrist, Dr. John Pillsbury, to whom he tells his fantastic story.

In a flashback Perry and his fiancée, Phyllis Dixon, a Southern girl, and still a rebel become involved in not one, but five murders committed in Perry's own home, which he had sold to a woman when he was called to Hollywood to write scenarios for the movies.

Perry plays detective and uncovers the murderer, but that only brings on complications which are riotous and frightening.

When the play returns to the present in the final scene, Perry completes his story and a most ingenious and surprising development brings hearty laughter to the conclusion of the play.

The head, a profile chosen for the new issue of coins in Britain and the Commonwealth nations, shows the Queen in profile with an unusually long, graceful neck.

It is clearly a pretty face, but is it the Queen's face? Many an Englishman studied the picture in today's papers and decided it wasn't.

Papers printed the artist's version side by side with real photographs of the Queen in similar profile and asked readers: "What do you think?"

Opponents of the design said it makes Elizabeth look too young—more like a girl of 16 than a woman of 27. Some said it looked more like her sister, Margaret.

Jacob Epstein, famous sculptor whose own work often arouses controversy, said: "It might be any pretty girl. It is not a good likeness as far as I can judge."

T. Humphrey Paget, artist who designed the head of King George VI for the last reign, disagreed. "It is a very pleasant design," he said. "And the Queen has a long neck. I have taken measurements."

Other supporters of the chosen design said it pictured the Queen with charm and dignity. The artist herself, Mrs. Mary Gillick, 71, said:

"I did not wish to make the Queen look more youthful than she is. But I had to guard, too, against making her look too old—an effect often emphasized when a design is reproduced in metal."

"If I had not been careful the Queen might have looked 40." Mrs. Gillick's design was picked by a committee headed by the Queen's husband, the Duke of Edinburgh, from 17 entries.

U.S. Salmon Packers Seek Lower Wages

SEATTLE (AP)—The Alaska Salmon Industry Inc. beat the unions to the punch this year, mailing out notices of contract termination Wednesday and asking for a cut in wage scales "to save the industry."

It is about this time of year that the unions usually terminate the existing contracts—as provided for in their wage agreement—and request increases in pay.

Deadline for the notices is Dec. 1. The letters of termination and the appeal for lower wage scales were sent out to the union in Seattle and Alaska by W. C. Arnold, managing director of the salmon packing association.

Thirty contracts involving 16,000 workers and some 300 different wage scales are involved. Arnold said preliminary negotiations probably will begin before the Christmas holidays and then resume in earnest later to permit movement of men and equipment by the late February deadline.

CNR Revenue Exceeds '51

MONTREAL—Operating revenues for the Canadian National System, all inclusive, for the month of October, 1952, amounted to $59,595,000.

Operating expenses were $51,169,000. The net operating revenue was $8,426,000.

In October, 1951, revenues were $56,183,000; expenses $50,077,000 and the net operating revenue was $6,106,000.

These figures are the operating revenues and expenses only, and they do not include taxes, equipment rentals or fixed charges.

Travel Agency Provides Many Services

Are you planning a trip to Europe, to South America, or perhaps the Hawaiian Islands?

If so, chance is you will be looking up Crawford Moore Travel Agency in Prince Rupert which is prepared to give any traveller personalized service with all the problems connected with distance travelling.

And the service is absolutely free. Prospective tourists or travelling businessmen give their plans to the agency, where they want to go, what stops are desired enroute, whether travel is desired by air, ship, bus or rail and all their worries are over.

Crawford Moore Travel Agencies are prepared to route trips to anywhere in the world . . . anywhere, that is, outside the Iron Curtain countries.

"No travel agency can handle such a trip," says Mr. Moore who is making his home in the city for the tenth year.

Mr. Moore, who lives with his wife and two teen-age daughters at 440 Sixth Avenue West, first came to the city in 1942 as business manager for B.C. Bridge & Dredging Co. Ltd. This was followed by an unsuccessful logging venture, after which he opened a public accountant's office.

Two years ago, Mr. Moore opened a travel agency as a sideline, which has developed into a flourishing business.

Recently, his agency received the stamp of approval from the International Air Transport Association (IATA), an international organization governing all scheduled air lines in the free countries.

Crawford Moore Travel Agency, while handling all types of travel, specializes in air transportation and is agent for more than 20 air lines throughout the world.

"I think air travel is the prime method of travel today, especially in and out of this northern country. The more air transportation we get here, the sooner will this country be developed."

But the agency also represents some 12 steamship lines, all major American railroads (Canadian railroads do not employ agencies, and all Canadian and American bus lines.

A travel agency's service to the public is free because the transportation companies pay for it. They are happy to do this because an agency takes a lot of work from their hands.

For instance, it may take as long as four or five hours to complete travel arrangements with one person, with arrangements pending for several weeks.

However, most any trip can be arranged from between two weeks to a month, which includes providing passports, visas, health certificates, confirmation of hotel reservations at all stops, confirmation of seating on every means of travel.

A tourist going to Berlin, for instance, can order here in Prince Rupert a U-drive car to pick him up at the airport of his destination.

A keen traveller himself, having visited the British Isles, other European countries, the U.S. and most parts of Canada, Mr. Moore can appreciate individual problems which may beset the prospective passenger to distant lands.

Persons seeking a holiday but not sure just where they should go will find a travel agency helpful, says Mr. Moore.

"They tell us how much they wish to spend. With the budget in mind we show them a wide selection of places where they can enjoy a holiday, just how much it's going to cost them and what they can expect to get for their money.

"We can often direct groups to money-saving group fares. This service is especially helpful to sportsmen and convention groups. Such special rates are only available if applied for."

WORKS TWO WAYS

But travel agencies do not only work one way. People from outside this area can arrange through this centre for all their travel needs along the way here.

This service is especially valued by sportsmen or business men coming to Prince Rupert from U. S. points, for through the agency accommodation is confirmed for them all along their route of travel.

Crawford Moore also operates an office in Terrace where it is supervised by Miss Elliot Head. Employees in the city office include Charles (Mickey) Webster, and Mr. Moore's two daughters, Barbara and Jacquelyn, help after school hours.

The office is located in the new Wallace Building, corner of Third Avenue and Fourth Street.

THE LETTERBOX

SOCIALIZE CREDIT

Editor, Daily News

An unbalanced national economy is our trouble today. Science and invention (with labor) have solved the art of production. Now our next problem is to arrange so that the people who produce all this "real wealth" may not lack money to buy the nation's product at retail prices from their wages and salaries in producing it.

Wages and salaries cover the entire earnings of all people in the nation, and statistics show that these wages and salaries never do provide enough money to balance the value of our production. All nations are suffering alike through lack of this solution. Where nature has not been so kind to them as to us, scarcity and stagnation are the rule.

Statistics for 1951 show that Canadian gross national production at retail price amounted to $21 billion, while at the same time wages and salaries were only $17 billion. This shows a shortage of $4 billion which people must have to buy the nation's production. How would you like to receive a cheque from your government, (equally divided to all citizens) of $4 billion? This $4 billion would have been your national dividend in 1951 with a Social Credit Parliament at Ottawa. The national support will put a Parliament at Ottawa that will monetize your credit, making it possible for you (as a nation) to purchase any amount produced. Isn't it logical that the more a nation can produce, the richer it is and the more it should be able to pay for?

Little to Lose, Much to Gain by Tweedsmuir Park Flooding

By ERIC S. MARTIN
British Columbia is gaining a large manufacturing centre, a city which is expected to be the third in population in the province, and in exchange B.C. is to give up about one-thousandth part of its total area.

Kitimat is being carved out of hitherto virtually unused and unknown bush-land, and the land that goes under water will be regretted by a few, but its passing will surely bring big returns in recreational value to those that seek it.

The wild-life here is not going to lose a thing, economically everything and everybody should gain! Let us have no talk of sunken trees polluting the waters and harming the trout; for each spring brings its snow-waters down and much vegetation, both living and dead, comes with it; the lake levels rise and myriad bugs, worms, larvae, etc., are greedily eaten by winter-hungry fish.

The trees which are not felled, but are gradually swallowed up by the flood, will serve as shelter for the many tiny aquatic creatures common to our northern lakes, and any exudation from them can have no possible deleterious effect, because of the vastness of the water area.

The fact of trees sticking up out of the water is of no concern whatever, it will surely be long hence before they become a navigational hazard, meantime you will find that the trout of all sizes will visit them as feeding places.

At this time there are several outfits busily logging off the north shore of Ootsa lake. The B.C. Forest Service would welcome other responsible parties and gives the inducement of the lowest stumpage in history, in order to get as much of this timber cut as possible.

Millions of feet of merchantable timber are not to be lost; because of fires through the years, the nature of the terrain, etc., the growth here is spotty, there is much second growth, and practically all the logs being taken out measure only 12 to 14 inches at the butt; this goes for Spruce and Jackpine, which is most of the cut anyway.

Things have been said about the offense to one's aesthetic sense when having to view this "sunken forest." How many people have ever seen Tweedsmuir Park anyway? Surprisingly few; an infinitely greater number will get a bigger satisfaction out of the benefits we are to derive from the end reason of this flooding!

There is an idea abroad that Tweedsmuir Park is to be flooded. This is not so. Look at a map, look at contour lines; the park itself is only to lose a few marshy places in spots that only surveyors, a few guides, and certain forest rangers, trappers and prospectors have visited. Parts of Blanchet lake and river, Chelashie river, and Chief Louis lake will change their shores; but generally speaking, all these places are so far back that only the grizzlies will notice it, and they won't care!

The north shore of Ootsa lake will eventually merge with the south end of Francols, and increase its accessibility; two portages hitherto necessary to voyagers around the Ootsa, Whitesal, Eutsuk, Tetachuk lake system will be obviated, and travellers from the western approach will shorten their car journey by many miles by using the Buck Falls road at Houston to Noralee.

Right there they will be on new water that will take them all around the park. (There is the for other powers to see about fixing up the Buck Falls road which is so "grievous" in wet weather.)

Make no talk of animals being flooded out of their homes. It would be a foolish mouse that stayed around to get its feet wet in such a gradual water-rise as this is to be. They have practice every spring in the freshets, so it seems they can take care of themselves; quite obviously the larger mammals are even better equipped to survive.

It has been said that there are approximately 30 million board feet of lumber to be lost in the flood area. It is known that the forest cover in this part of the province is about 5000 FBM to the acre, work a simple sum in arithmetic and it shows the flood area to be negligible when compared to the huge size of B.C.

The same result shows the sparseness of the standing timber and how sporadically it grows. The figure of $25 million has been quoted as the cost of removing the merchantable timber from the Tweedsmuir Park area, and in the same breath we are informed that as far as the government can gather, there are approximately 30 million FBM in the area to be flooded.

It seems that it costs quite a lot of money to go logging these days. Even if the $25 million figure were correct, it is still merely 4 1/2 per cent of the $550 million that Alcan is putting into Kitimat.

There will be created a reservoir for the famous trout, the ducks and geese will have more water for their own needs, and if the land area in which our much sought after game animals roam is slightly reduced, then should they not become easier to find? (Or will they?)

Neighbor to the south proudly points to the record fish being taken from Lake Mead, The Tennessee Valley Authority was much maligned when it was first mooted; today there is no place in the U.S. that consistently provides more and larger Wall-eyes, yet both these marvellous fishing holes are man-made!

In my own life I claim a responsibility for some flooding. I have seen the standing timber on my own land become submerged, but where there once were only mud turtles and tap-poles, today one may take three kinds of trout, two kinds of bass, crappies and perch, and even mudcats. Of these fish, two kinds of trout, one kind of bass and the crappies were introduced since the flooding. For the record, this is on Salmon Lake in Hastings County, Ontario.

Have an end to quibbling, brother sportsmen. Take the long view and realize that is someone loses a little, the world gains a lot.

Black Edge Letter Means Trouble

VANCOUVER (CP)—A letter edged in black almost brought trouble to store owner Julian Chaykowski.

He sent Mrs. Ronald E. Smith a receipt for a bill in an envelope which had half-inch black bands linked across both ends.

Mrs. Smith charged she suffered from shock and hysteria when the postman brought the letter. She sued for $500 damages.

The case collapsed in county court. The envelope couldn't be produced and her claim was dismissed.

Pioneering Duties Performed By Well-Known Coast Steamer

By BILL RAYMOND

An announcement that the well-known Canadian National steamship "Prince Rupert" will be replaced by a newly-built vessel sometime in 1955 comes as a surprise to many citizens of this city who have known the ship for 40 years.

It's been 42 years since a couple of smart looking passenger liners were first seen in British Columbia, and Alaskan waters. In smart appearance and modern design, there had been nothing to approach them this far north. They would supplement on the sea, the second trans-continental railway - Grand Trunk Pacific - within a few years of completion.

The ships were named, the Prince Rupert and the Prince George and both gave admirable performance. The latter was burned at Ketchikan one summer morning, not so long ago. And now comes word that her sister pioneer ship is to be replaced, possibly not later than 1955.

Thus the story of these swift and graceful vessels - with their three funnels giving a touch of pride in bearing the national colors - works its way to the end.

Both were built in 1910 at Wallsend-on-Tyne, Newcastle, England, in the yards of Swan, Hunter, Wigham and Richardson Ltd.

The late Capt. Davies brought the Prince Rupert to her namesake port. Thousands of tales, incidents, yarns, recollections might be told of these 42 years concerning the fleets and the seamen.

In one way or another, there was no lack of drama, adventure and devotion. It would make a book of superlative interest.

A German warship called the Dresden was reported in the Pacific but she did not remain long in the north. According to a later and like enough true story the Dresden had little or no knowledge of B.C. coast defences. However, she sighted a three-funnelled ship with cruiser stern, and lost no time in speeding for the south.

It's believed the Dresden took the SS Prince Rupert for a mysterious warship.

The Prince George, between 1914 and 1918, was converted into a hospital craft, and for many months was available, so long as there was any likelihood of hostilities off western shores.

It was the Prince George that brought Sir Wilfred Laurier on his first and only visit to Prince Rupert. This was before incorporation of the city, on a beautiful September day. The Prince George was escorted into the harbor by dozens of government boats, and a swarm of private craft of all sizes.

Someone on the steamer had a camera. Later that fall, the Toronto Globe printed a large picture of Laurier, smilingly standing on the bridge of the Prince George, with the caption: "The Old Captain at the Helm."

Once, the GTP-CN, dating back to the beginning of organization routine, had a sizeable fleet, including the Prince Rupert, Prince George, Prince John, Prince Albert, Prince William, and of course the Prince Henry, the Prince David and the Prince Robert. They were here during the regime of Sir Henry Thornton. One served as a troopship. Built in England, they were by far the largest and most elaborate ever assigned to this part of the west.

EARLY SKIPPERS
Captain MacKenzie, Captain Nidden, Captain Donald, Captain McLean, Captain Moorehouse and Capt. Davies are but few of the many capable and experienced officers but all were here in early days.

Being inevitable, there were accidents from time to time. Once the Prince Rupert sank in Swanson Bay, to be salvaged and restored at Prince Rupert. Another time she sank at her dock in Esquimalt, and on another occasion grounded at Anyox. Last year she collided with the Princess Kathleen, which this year ended her career on the rocks of the south Alaska coast.
