Spirit of Unity of Purpose Won Great Canadian Victories in France Declared McDonnell

The need of unity of purpose in order to attain success was ably illustrated in an address given during the morning service at the Anglican Cathedral yesterday by General Sir Archibald McDonnell, who spoke on the Evolution of the Canadian Corps, in connection with his experiences as head of the first Canadian division during the war.

All that Canadahad when war broke out was her men, said Sir Archibald, but they had the advantage of a British and French heritage, they had been trained on the playground as well as in casions in repelling the invader.

The Germans expected that untrained men from this country would run when they met the trained soldiers of their army, and they did run, but it was not in the direction the Germans thought. There were among them two classes of men, the native Canadians and Canadians by adoption. Both were of difterent types from the stay-at-homes of the mother country. They were rugged men, full of expediency and invention, but held together by devotion to one flag, one king and one empire.

General McDonnell said any person who mixed with the Canadians at Valcartier would be struck by their narrow parochialism. There were petty dismen of courage but they thought terms of the platoon and not in that of the army. They were trained and taken here during Saturday night from Queen to France and gradually they lost this petty spirit, broadened in their ideas and when the time came to do their big fighting they fought as a unit with one purpose, forgetting all their former sectionalism. The success of the army and the honor of Canada was the only that he was found definitely to be missthought, when they were given that great task of taking Vimy Ridge with four divisions, something that the the provincial police, which made such French army had failed to do with 24

General Byng had preached corps unity corps and they won that great victory.

The outside opinion of Canadians assessor. was that they were above the average in physique, there were no retreating chins and they had good eyes, the splendid eyes of a race of free men. They went on from victory to victory. defeating 47 divisions of the enemy and taking 28,000 prisoners. They were brave to a fault. In religion they were tolerant but there were no athiests COUNSEL PROMISES TO PRODUCE among them. The Canadian Corps was still a great army, living or dead, and one of the bravest of them was the man so well known here, Colonel Cy Peck, whose gallantry had such a far reach-

In a pleasant conversational manner General Sir Archibald Cameron Mc-Donnell, K.C.B., C.M.G., D.S.O., dis tinguished military man and commander of the First Division in France during the Great War, related many early anecdotes of the Royal Northwest Mounted Police and more briefly experiences of the Boer War and European ternoon. There was a large gathering of ladies, with many men also in attendance, and Sir Archibald's discourse was listened to with much interest and rapt attention.
