NEAR ANYOX

Considerable Excitement Caused by Discovery Near Bonanza

Considerable excitement has been caused at Anyox and Alice Arm by what is heralled as the Northern British Columbia when John McCallum, Ralph Ingraham and a Scandinavian named Eric staked three claims adjoining the Bonanza mine, a short distance up Granby Bay from Anyox, after locating a vein of ore carrying free gold. The ore is quartz with pure gold showing all over it and is said to be of fabulous value. The vein is from two to six feet wide and has been traced for a distance of 400 feet on the surface. It is said to run into the Bonanza ground which is owned by the Granby Co. and is at present under extensive development with a view to operating it as an additional copper supply for the Anyox smelter.

The fire department responded three alarms yesterday.

At 12.30 noon there was a grass fire which ignited the plank road leading to the elevator in Westview. Damage consisted of the burning of a few planks. At 4 o'clock in the afternoon the roof of a Chinese shack at the corner of Fulton and Taylor Streets caught fire from a chimney spark. Part of the roof was burned.

At 8.30 last evening a short circuit of the ignition system set the Casey mail carrying car on fire at the corner of Eighth Avenue and Lotbiniere Street. The fire was out before the department arrived on the scene. The long spell of warm, dry weather is causing an unusual fire hazard in Prince Rupert generally.

Prince Rupert. Favored with beautiful weather everything was carried out without a single hitch. A scow which was kindly donated by the Georgetown Lumber Co. left the government wharf at 6.30 a.m. taking the paraphernalia, was towed over by the Tide-Rip. (donated by George Bushby) Capt. Jeff Lambley. It was much appreciated by the boys as it assisted materially as a labor saver. The number carried by the official boats were: men, 245, women, 208, children 413, besides parties who came over in private boats. The boats were Tackla, Capt. Chris. Markvold; Viking, Capt. H. Pacific Milk is one of was cancelled and, instead, the trip the industries that contribute will be taken by the steamer Princess to the list. Everything down to Kathleen which will arrive here about the nails in the boxes is made noon tomorrow enroute north. It will be the first call at Prince Rupert or Alaska ports of the palatial new steamer which was commissioned two or three years ago in the Vancouver-Victoria-Seattle triangle run. The regular master of the Princess Kathleen is Capt. Thomas Rippon but whether he will bring the vessel north on this special trip is not known. The vessel will have a large group of round trip tourist passengers on board. She will pick up the regular schedule of the Princess Louise in the notrh, and is due to call here southbound on Saturday.

> Also due to the accident to the Princess Louise, the sailing north of the Princess Royal on the local run this week is cancelled, it was announced this morning.

Hon. Dr. S. F. Tolmie, provincial Conservative leader, addressed a public meeting in Hazelton on Saturday night and was given a good reception. On the way here from Prince Rupert, Dr. Tolmie gave an open-air address from the rear of the train at Terrace on Saturday afternoon. From Hazelton he roceeded to Smithers, addressing an open air meening at Lake Kathlyn on Sunday. After Smithers, the Conservative leaders and his party go to Burns Lake and Prince George and thence by automobile to Ashcroft and the southern interior of the province before winding up the campaign in Vancouver and Victoria a few days before the election date.

THE EFFECT OF BLOOD-SUPPLY ON NERVES

In addition to the direct effect of pressure upon the nerves. owing to a subluxation, there is also an indirect effect, as a result of the occlusion of the blood-vessels which pass through the intervertebral openings.

The nerve-fibre requires a constant supply of blood for the maintenance of its irritability. The irritability of the nerve cannot long continue without oxygen, and a nerve which has been removed from the body is found to remain irritable longer in oxygen than in air, and in air than in an atmosphere which contains no oxygen.

It will be learned further on that one of the effects of a subluxation is pressure upon the arteries and veins. These arteries supply the structures of the corresponding segment of the spine with nourishment, and the veins carry away the waste materials. When the circulation of the bloois impeded, there will consequently be an impoverishment of the nerves, and an accumulation of waste materials, both of which have a deleterious effect on the nerves.

Another function of the blood in respect to the nerves is that it distributes heat. A nerve which is deprived of this loses its power of irritability and conductivity. This can be demonstrated by dipping the elbow in ice-water, and allowing it to remain there until the cold has had time to penetrate; at first there will be pain, but as the effect of the cold becomes greater, the pain is replaced by numbness, both the Ir ritability and the power of conduction of the nerve being re-

In like manner obstruction of the arteries passing through spinal openings, by pressure upon them of the misplaced margins of the foramen, diminish the blood-supply to the nerves, and hence the heat which the blood normally conveys to them. Impulses to be transmitted by that nerve will accordingly be impeded, or fail to reach their destination, and disorders in the parts thus deprived of their necessary nerveforce will follow.

Further, the blood has the power to neutralize the acids which are produced by the cells during action, and so maintain the alkalinity essential to the life and activity of the cell; also, by virtue of the salts which it contains it secures the osmotic relations which are necessary to the preservation of the normal chemical constitution of the protoplasm of the

The irritability of nerve protoplasm is markedly influenced by even slight changes in its constitution. If, experimentally, a nerve be allowed to lie in a liquid of a differen composition from its own fluid, and especially if such liquit be injected into its blood-vessels, an interchange of materials takes place which results in an alteration of the tissue and a change of its irritability. If, therefor, the venous flow is obstructed, the acid waste materials of the activities of the herves remain within them. and a change in the constitution of their protoplasm impairs their irritability and conductivity. This effect the pressure of the misplaced margins of an intervertebral foramen (open ing) produces by obstructing of the blood in the veins which it transmits.
