Arrives Here in Skin Canoe from Juneau On Way New York

Alberta Voight, the western Alaskan, who left Juneau a month ago or thereabouts in a walrus skin canoe bound for New York, arrived here late last night, having been delayed by bad weather, and plans to remain here until there is a change for the better.
Voight said on arrival that it took him all week to get here from Ketchikan. One day he made only nine miles.
The canoe is low in the water when he and the outfit are aboard, giving only about two inches of freeboard. He uses a double ended paddle and when the weather is favorable makes good speed. He is quite enthusiastic over the prospect of getting to New York.
Voight at first planned to paddle from Seward, but he found the waters of the Gulf of Alaska so rough that he took his canoe as far as Juneau in the steamer Yukon and made the Alaska capital his starting point.

CANADA LIKES RADIO GAME

Over Quarter of Million Licenses Taken Out in Dominion So Far

OTTAWA, July 27.—There are 296,756 persons in Canada holding radio licenses and some thousands using sets who have not gone through the formality of taking out a license. All these will be affected by the report of the royal commission on radio, which is now working on the report that will be made to the government.
Several alternative proposals are under consideration, including the British broadcasting system, with a government owned and operated broadcasting organization, private companies subsidized by the state, or a continuation of the present system of private stations under government supervision in respect to licensing and wave lengths.
Interest in Canada in radio is increasing tremendously. Last year the production of complete radio sets, parts and batteries in Canada totalled $12,768,024, which was 45 per cent higher than the 1927 production. In addition sets and parts imported from the United States had a value of $5,261,642.
The number of transmitting licenses total 1,146, but this includes 70 aircraft licenses and 313 ship licenses. There were 79 private commercial, 45 experimental, five training amateur broadcasting broadcasters, five coast licenses, four public commercial, 45 experimental, five training school and 584 amateur experimental.

WHEAT SOWN ON SUMMER FALLOW WILL BE VERY LIGHT IN

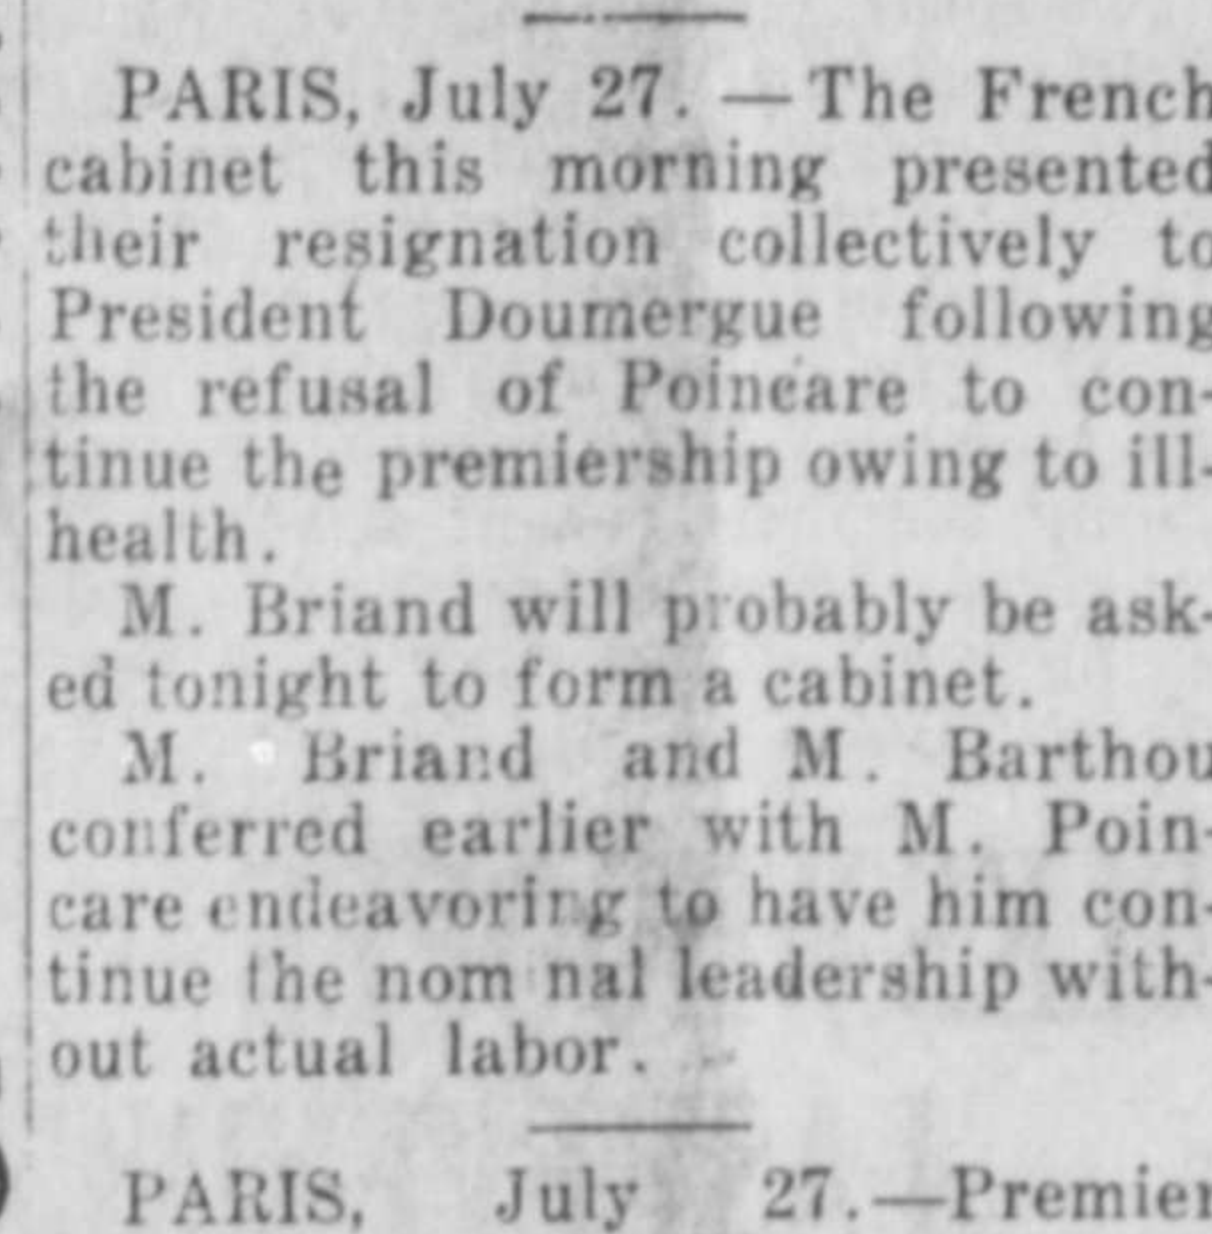

Hills, Melfort, and southward to Saskatoon, Humboldt and Watrous, is weathering the abnormal weather conditions. Manitoba, because of scattered showers, also has a fighting chance for a fair crop, but otherwise the outlook is, to say the least, pessimistic.

B. C. SECTION PEACE RIVER PROGRESSING

Developing Faster Than Other Parts of Province Says Resident on Way to Rupert

Pred Fraser, former government agent at Peace Coupe, arrived in the city on Tuesday evening on his way to the coast, says the Prince George Citizen. He says the Peace River section is settling much quicker than any other portion of the province, and that next year it will produce one million bushels of wheat, in addition to all other grains. The district suffered a little this year from lack of rain, but nothing as compared with the prairie provinces. During the past few days there have been a number of local showers, and the wheat outlook is for a yield of from 25 to 30 bushels to the acre. This will be a drop from a yield of from 40 to 45 bushels, but with the increase in price the farmers will do about as well with the small yield as they would with the larger yields in years of bumper crops.
Mr. Fraser says there are now about 4000 settlers in the B.C. section of the Peace River district, the gain for the past 18 months being fully 1800. The settlement is spreading out north of Fort St. John for a distance of 100 miles, is now some distance beyond the northern boundary of the railway block and is covering the provincial government lands. It has also moved westward toward the Pine River and the provincial lands outside the western boundary of the block. In what is known as the Fort St. John area there are now fully 400 settlers.
There are a large number of tractors in the district and new ground is being broken at a rapid rate. Mr. Fraser says fully 20,000 acres will be added to the present crop area in 1930, and that the increase in the cultivated acreage will mount steadily each year.
Mr. Fraser says the great mistake made by the government in connection with the Peace River section has been the failure to provide direct connection with the rest of the province. Admitting there were great difficulties in the way of providing rail connection, this could not be pleaded for the failure to provide an automobile highway in advance of the railway. This would have done much to secure the trade of the district for the business houses of British Columbia, but as matters stand the business is now going to Edmonton, and when the highways and railway come the merchants of the province will have to fight with those of Edmonton to regain much lost ground.
The construction of highways is at present the big problem of the Peace River. The settlers have got out miles from existing roads, and if they are to succeed they must be given roads to move their crops. In no section of the province would a road expenditure of $150,000 bring quicker and more lasting results than in the Peace River.

POOR OUTLOOK FOR PRAIRIE CROP

This Season According to Report Canadian National Issued Today

WINNIPEG, July 27.—A merciless sun has seared and scorched the prairies during the past week so that unprecedented temperatures have obtained in many parts of the west. Under this terrific heat the crops already suffering from lack of moisture have deteriorated rapidly, so that not even the most sanguine observer is counting upon greater than a fifty per cent yield, according to the thirtieth weekly crop report of the Canadian National Railways, issued today.
Wheat sown on summer fallow will be very light in almost every part of the west, while that sown on stubble can be completely counted out of the year's reckoning.
The central part of Alberta and southern Saskatchewan are suffering the most. There is still hope for southern Alberta, where heavy rains early in the summer built up a reserve of moisture, though rains must be heavy and immediately to save the situation there.
A heavy rain on the 19th in southeastern Saskatchewan and southern Manitoba helped conditions there considerably, but rain is badly needed now. There is, however, a ray of hope in a few sections.
The Peace River district shows promise of an excellent crop and the northern section of Saskatchewan from North Battleford eastward through Prince Albert, Paddockwood, Big River, Birch

GARDINER WILL NOT RESIGN AT PRESENT TIME

REGINA, July 27.—In a letter to Dr. J. T. M. Anderson, leader of the opposition groups, who yesterday submitted to him a petition signed by 35 members elect of the legislature, requesting that he call upon Premier Gardiner and cabinet to resign on the ground that the government no longer possesses the confidence of the legislature, Lieut. Governor Newlands states that he had discussed the situation with the Premier and had agreed with him that, as leader of the largest group in the house, he was entitled to meet the legislature and let it decide the course of events on the understanding that the legislature be called together at the earliest possible moment.
The legislature will be summoned on September 3.

RADIO INSPECTOR ALASKA APPOINTED TO CONTROL BETTER

SEATTLE, July 27.—The Department of Commerce is reported contemplating an expansion of activities in the Seventh Radio District, including a branch office in Alaska in addition to the proposed branch in Portland.
Edwin W. Lovejoy, Radio Inspector, is here and said the move was in line with efforts to establish a definite policy covering supervision of radio communication in Alaska.
The Alaska office will be in charge of a Radio Inspector from the States and the office will probably be established at Ketchikan.
There are now three broadcasting stations in Alaska. Because of legislation governing license grants in the States supervision has never been extended to solve the Alaskan radio problem. Some of these stations are on long waves and some on short waves, others "running wild." These conditions will be avoided if an inspector is on the ground in Alaska, it is believed.

Pinks are now running in the Skeena River in large numbers and big catches are being made. During the week the average of sockeyes to the boat has been 35 and of pinks about 100. The high boat got over 400 pinks.
On the Naas River the run of sockeyes has been about the same as on the Skeena this week, but the pinks have been slower coming. The latest report gives thirty to the boat.

VISIT OF MR. BENNETT

Hon. R. B. Bennett, leader of the Conservative Party throughout the Dominion, is expected to arrive in Peace Rupert Monday, August 12, in the course of a speaking tour throughout the west. He is now in southern British Columbia and is taking in most of the communities on Vancouver Island and the lower mainland.

Mr. Bennett will leave Vancouver for the north about August 6 and will make several stops, arriving at Anxoy for a meeting August 9. The following night, which is a Saturday, he will be at Stewart.

From Prince Rupert the leader goes to the interior, speaking at Smithers and Prince George and Quesnel.

We suggest that Prince Rupert people unite to give the Conservative leader a hearty welcome. While he is bound on a political mission, Liberals as well as Conservatives will want to hear him and meet him. Should he at some time become Premier, he will be premier of Liberals as well as Conservatives. He will be head of the Government. Let us show Mr. Bennett that we can all be Canadians and that we appreciate his efforts in the cause of Canada, no matter what some think of the policy he advocates.

GYMNASIUM FUND STARTED

The jubilee celebration committee has started a fund for the erection of a community hall or gymnasium in the city. This is an excellent thing and it is to be expected that in the fall steps will be taken to add to that amount and possibly erect the building.

For the past ten years people have been talking about a community gym. Efforts have been made to get off on a good start, but a ways something has interfered. Now it is possible something will be done. At any rate, the nucleus is encouraging. If the committee that takes the matter in hand is not too ambitious in regard to the size of the building they should meet with success.

Most of the original schemes included the building of a swimming tank with proper heating and dressing rooms. It was perhaps too much to expect just yet.

REAL DEVELOPMENT GOING ON

Yesterday we published an article from a visitor who has been through the country, stopping off at many points, and he sees great improvements made and real developments going on. Everywhere there is advancement. This indicates that we do not need to feel anything but optimistic. All we need now is a good highway from Prince Rupert to Jasper to give the north an opportunity to share in the prosperity of the south. Today, owing to the lack of such facilities, the north has not shown that progress which was necessary if she was to keep pace with the rest of the province.

CLOSE BASEBALL GAME PLAYED

Elks Tie With Sons of Canada, In One of Closest Games of Season

Last night at Acropolis Hill grounds Elks and Sons of Canada played a four to four tie game that was called at the end of the ninth on account of darkness. A fair sized crowd witnessed one of the best played games that have been seen on the hill this year. Running catches in the outfield, snappy pick-ups in the infield and good batting featured the game. Loblick, on the mound for the Elks, was going nicely, allowing only six hits and striking out 11 men. Wendie, pitching for the Sons, was fairly steady, and was given sterling support. Downie, went in to relieve him in the last two frames and held the Elks down.

Stalker, in left field for the Sons, covered from in behind second clear to the foul line and allowed nothing to hit the ground in his vicinity. Arsenau, playing the same field for the Elks, did some nice fielding too, making a couple of hard, running catches. The Sons got all of their runs in the first inning on two hits and a brace of errors. The Elks tightened up after that, however, and the best the Sons could do was to get three men as far as second from then on.

The Lodge Men scored one in the first, when Harold tripped to right and came in on George Arsenau's drive to centre. They got two more in the fourth. Loblick smacked one to centre for three bases and Alex Mitchell was hit by a pitched ball. Goose was thrown out at first, Loblick holding third. Stevens hit one at Menzies which he failed to handle and before the ball was recovered both Herman and Mitchell had crossed the rubber. In the seventh, with two out Loblick hit one to right field. He stole second and came home on a hit by Alex Mitchell. The ball went down the third base line, and Howe came in after it, but it bounced away outside the line and the umpire said it was fair.

MANY HEARD THE AUDITION

Musical Event Given by Radio Electrola at I. O. D. E. Hall Last Evening Proved Enjoyable

D. C. McRae on behalf of McRae Bros. gave another musical audition last evening at the I. O. D. E. Hall which proved most enjoyable. There was a good crowd present and all were particularly pleased at the quality of the reproduction both of radio and gramophone music.

Being a ten-tube instrument, the radio broadcast can be picked up so much more easily than with the ordinary radio receiver. While radio was a little later in coming in last night than at the previous audition, the results were excellent and much appreciated.

All who have heard the new Radio-Electrola enthuse over it as being the most recent advance in musical reproduction and something better than they have ever heard before.

ELKS WHOOPEE LAST EVENING

Enjoyable Time Spent by Members and Friends of the Order at Elks' Home

There was a great time at the Elks' whoopee at their home last night in the Halgerson Block, when, in addition to cards and dancing, there was a pianist of note, who gave a number of particularly fine selections. It was Jack Smith, pianist for Rudy Sieger's Fairmont Hotel broadcasting orchestra of San Francisco. He played several numbers which were much appreciated. Supper was served after the cards tournament closed and this was followed by dancing to Balagoo's orchestra which lasted until 2:30. About two hundred people were present. Winners at cards follow:

Bridge—Ladies' first, Mrs. Frizzell; second, Mrs. Conlon Dobb; gent's first, Joe Jack; second, J. E. Morris.
Whist—Ladies' first, Miss Myfanwy Campbell; second, Mrs. A. Swanson; gent's first, A. Brochu; second, D. Owen.

Sport Chat

Jack Hobbs has been doing some great scoring for Surrey in English county cricket recently. When playing against Somersetshire he ran up a score of 204. Another man on the same team, Shepherd, made 131 not out. In a match of Yorkshire and Glamorgan, Barber made 114, Oldroyd, 103 and Greenwood 104 not out, all Yorkshire men. Groom, playing for Warwickshire, against Northamptonshire batted 131 not out.

Great Britain's Wightman Cup team members who are now in the States, will for the first time be equipped with an official blazer. The jacket was designed by the former Wimbledon champion, Miss D. Boothby, now Mrs. Arthur Green. It is of white cloth, with silver buttons. On the breast pocket is the Union Jack, with crossed rackets, and the year 1929 underneath. The British girls meet a United States team at Forest Hills next month in the annual renewal of their international tennis rivalry.

Thrilling Mystery Story in 30 chapters

THE GREEN SHADOW

by HERMAN LANDON

Synopsis

Adele Castle has just had the weird adventure of her life. She has been taken by a mysterious Miss Conway to meet Dr. Moffett, whom she meets but does not see. For as she enters the room of an old house in a part of New York, she does not recognize, she is met by a green light through which she observes the vague outline of a man. He tells her he knows her father is the "Mr. Graves" whom police seek as the associate of Daniel Forrester, who died after getting $10,000,000 by fraud. He claims to have papers which, if made public, would result in Mr. Castle going to jail.

Adele calls on her father, who tells her Dr. Moffett demands $100,000 for his silence, though Mr. Castle profited but little by Forrester's operations, which he did not discover were illegal until after the latter's death. On reaching home Adele finds a note referring to the color green and making an appointment for the next day in Central Park. It is signed "the Picaroon."

INSTALLMENT SIX

MR. FERRYMAN CALLS

Captain John Summers, stockily built, sturdy of jaw, with a reddish complexion and a skull that was considerably larger than symmetry allowed, sat at his desk in the police headquarters building on Center Street and tried to fix his attention on a stack of reports.

There was a sour, fretting look on his face. Now and then he made a petulant jab with a pencil. He did not like to read these reports. He did not like any of the administrative functions connected with his position. If Captain Summers could have followed his inclination he would have been out hunting criminals—the Picaroon, for instance.

Summers nursed a special grievance against the Picaroon—the slippery and elusive scamp who amused himself by plundering people's safes and who always left a card behind him stating that the victim could recover his valuables upon paying 10 per cent of their value to a certain philanthropic society.

Time and again Summers had accepted the challenge, but something had always gone wrong. On several occasions he had manoeuvred the Picaroon into a tight corner, but the Picaroon had always slipped out. It was the ambition of Summers' life to catch him some day. That day, when it came, would heal all the wounds his pride had suffered.

But it was a difficult task he had set himself. No one seemed to know anything about the Picaroon except that he had a penchant for annexing other people's valuables and a special talent for avoiding capture. Somehow the rumor had got abroad that he was a wealthy and luxurious person who at one time had suffered grievously from one of the law's mistakes, but this was only a surmise on the part of the public and the newspapers.

Information of a more definite character was in Summers' possession, but he kept it rigidly to himself.

Many little details and numerous trifling occurrences, each of no importance when viewed by itself but quite significant in the aggregate, had focused Summers' suspicion on a certain individual. That individual was Martin Dale, a leisurely, cultured and well-to-do gentleman whose good looks, easy manners, ready smile and breezy chatter had made him a favorite everywhere.

Martin Dale

Captain Summers was almost certain that this Martin Dale was the Picaroon, but so far he had been unable to prove it.

Strangest of all, he liked Martin Dale. They often lunched together. Summers enjoyed Dale's pungent anecdotes about life in clubs and society, and Dale relished the captain's observations concerning crime and criminals. Occasionally the conversation veered round to the subject of the Picaroon, and then Dale would look very innocent, and Summers' reddish face would close up like a poker player's. Yet, much as Summers liked Dale, he would not let friendship interfere with duty if his chance to capture the Picaroon should ever come.

There was no particular reason why he should be thinking about the Picaroon this morning, yet his thoughts strayed occasionally from the reports before him. The Picaroon had not been active for several weeks. That meant nothing, however. Probably he was planning some particularly brilliant exploit. The Picaroon was full of brilliant ideas. Oh, well, there was such a thing as being too brilliant. In Captain Summers' estimation. Some day the scamp would go a little too far, and then—

The captain moistened his lips as if contemplating some particularly savory mental morsel. The Picaroon had humiliated him time and again. Friendship or no friendship, Summers would give no quarter when the great day arrived. And he knew Dale would accept none. He would take his punishment with a smile and a shrug like a thoroughbred sport.

That was one of the things he liked about Dale, his sportmanlike. And Dale had many other likeable traits. It was really odd how Summers could go thoroughly like a man whose alter ego he was determined to put in jail. It was a psychological phenomenon that he had never puzzled out.

The door opened and a uniformed attendant announced that Mr. Alexander Ferryman wished to see the captain on important business.

A tall gentleman entered. He was fastidiously dressed and carried himself with an air of distinction. He was lean and straight, looked about 50, carried a silver-knobbed cane and wore glasses on a ribbon.

Ferryman's Story

"I have something rather curious to report to you," he said at length. "It may sound insignificant to you but it has worried me a great deal. I have hesitated a long time before finally deciding to bring the matter to the attention of the police. It concerns a situation that may result in some very unpleasant, not to say tragic, developments."

"Well?" said Summers tartly. "I must explain a few things in order that you may understand the situation clearly. I am a retired business man. I own two adjoining houses on Bank Street, No. 260 and No. 262. They are old houses of the comfortable kind that were built two generations ago. Unfortunately that kind is rapidly passing out of existence."

Mr. Ferryman sighed. Captain Summers looked bored.

"Until four years ago," Mr. Ferryman continued, "I lived with my wife at No. 262. I had done everything to make it comfortable for her, furnishing the house in the very best fashion I could afford. I was deeply devoted to her, and for a time we lived happily."

"Then my wife began to show signs of restlessness. She was much younger than I—only a little more than half my age. Naturally she was more active than I, and she craved more pleasure and more youthful companionship. Perhaps I didn't try to understand her as I should. I realize now that I was not the right sort of companion for her. I couldn't—well, to cut a long and distressing story short, my wife left me four years ago."

"With another man?" Summers bluntly suggested.

The visitor bristled. He tapped his cane against the floor. "You have no right to make such an insinuation. I resent it. I will not have my wife calumniated in his mind."

"Keep cool," Summers advised, "and try to use shorter words. It will save time. And don't wear out my floor with that stick."

Mr. Ferryman seemed partly mollified. "I keep forgetting that strangers can't feel as strongly about the matter as I do. My wife simply went away, without any explanation whatever. I was heartbroken. I was very much in love with her, and I am still. If you could realize how beautiful she was you would understand. This will give you a faint idea."

He snapped the back of his watch open and exhibited a small photograph. Summers looked at it, observed that it was indeed a beautiful face and, as was his habit, filed away an image of the features in his mind.

"Of course this doesn't do her justice," said Mr. Ferryman, shutting the watch and putting it into his pocket. "It may help you to understand, however, why I am so passionately devoted to her. After she had gone I moved next door, to No. 260. I couldn't endure the former associations. They reminded me of her and added to my grief. But I left everything as it was in the old house. I have a caretaker there, a faithful old fellow named Axelson, who keeps everything neat and clean and in repair. When she comes back—and Mr. Ferryman sighed wistfully—"I want her to find everything as it was when she left."

Green Light Again

"You're sure she will come back?" "I feel it—I feel it in here," Mr. Ferryman touched his heart. "Some day she'll come back repentant, and then we shall begin life at No. 262 all over again. Every night I sit at my window watching for her. Every morning—"

"But you are not interested in that. I have made these explanations so that you may understand what follows. Several times within the last six or seven months, Axelson has come to me and reported that strange things are going on at No. 262."

"What, for instance?" Summers asked, showing interest for the first time.

"Perhaps you will smile when I tell you," said Mr. Ferryman in a diffident tone. "You see, the old house is sacred to me and it is possible that I attach undue importance to what happens there."

"So far nothing very sensational has happened—at least, it may not seem very sensational to you. Axelson has reported to me that minor articles have disappeared from time to time. He has also discovered evidence of trespassers in various parts of the house. Now and then, he tells me, he hears footfalls in the night."

Summers looked bored again. "I'd advise you to hire a better watchman and put new locks on the doors."

"Oh, Axelson is efficient enough, but these things seem to be beyond him. But I haven't told you the strangest part yet. Twice, upon hearing these footfalls in the night, Axelson has got out of bed to investigate. The sounds seemed to come from the library, so he went there. On each occasion a strange green light has been flashed in his face the moment he entered."

"A green light?"

"Yes, a green light. Where it comes from Axelson can't imagine. It lasts only an instant, he tells me, and then it's gone. He has searched thoroughly, but there seems to be no explanation."

"Did he hear anything when he saw the green light?"

"Yes, footsteps moving about the room. But after the green light had gone out and he had turned on the electric light, there was nobody in the room."

"Summers thought for a moment. "Does Axelson drink?"

"Not a drop. And I am positive he is not subject to hallucinations of any sort. Now, I don't like the idea of such things going on in a house owned by me, and especially one that holds such intimate associations. It seems to me that the matter requires an investigation."

Summers gave his visitor a narrow and not very complimentary look. "I think you are exciting yourself over nothing," he declared. "Axelson is probably a drunkard or a dope addict. Just by looking at them you can't always tell what they are doing when nobody is watching."

"My advice to you is to take Axelson's cock-and-bull stories with a grain of salt. Take two grains for good measure. And next time he tells you one of these yarns send him over to me 'til—"

The telephone on Summers' desk rang. He answered, listened with an indifferent air for a moment, then jerked up his top-heavy head and was all alertness. He drew a pad to him and wrote something on it. Then he turned to Mr. Ferryman with a curious look in his eyes.

"What did you say was the address of the house you formerly occupied with your wife?"

"No. 262 Bank Street." Mr. Ferryman lifted his brows as if at a loss to know what the question meant. "I am now living at No. 260."

"Queer," said Summers, looking down at the pad on which he had written. "I've just had a report that a woman's body has been found at No. 262."

Mr. Ferryman started, then sat in stunned silence. "Body—my house!" he stammered at length. "Do you mean there has been a—murder?"

"It looks that way," Summers picked up the telephone again and snapped a few orders into the transmitter. "Better come with me Mr. Ferryman," he said when he had finished.

The visitor pulled himself together and followed the captain from the office and down the stairs. His car was at the curb, and they jumped in and drove to Bank Street. The house in question was one of two murky, old-fashioned buildings with green shutters and a faint light over each door. Summers entered first and was saluted by a policeman standing in the vestibule. The inner door was opened by a gaunt, elderly man, stoop-shouldered and white-faced.

"What happened Axelson?" Mr. Ferryman asked excitedly.

"Murder, I'm afraid, sir." The servant pointed a shaking finger up the stairway. "I happened to go up there about an hour ago, and that's when I found the body. It's terrible, sir!"

INTELLIGENCE TESTS

London Inspector Says These Tests Are of Great Value in Education

CAPETOWN, South Africa, July 25.—Educational science has made tremendous strides since the last meeting of the British Association in South Africa in 1905, said C. W. Kimmins, M.A., D. Sc., chief inspector of the educational department, London County Council, in his presidential address to the educational science section of the British Association for the Advancement of Science today.

Discussing modern movements in education, Dr. Kimmins said one of the most significant changes in educational science since 1905 was the change in the attitude towards the very young child, particularly in intelligence tests, which he endorsed.

Dealing with the question of the child of under six years he said: "The difficulty is that although parenthood is the most important profession in the world, there is at present no specific preparation for it and there is no immediate prospect of a higher standard of parenthood. Yet it is clear that in dealing with the young child there is a distinct need of expert guidance. If, however, the home and the nursery school work together the problem of children upon the state will rapidly decrease in number. There can be no doubt whatever that with a well organized nursery school system there will be a significant advance in the mental, physical and social welfare of the children."

World of Child

Discussing some of the psychological peculiarities of the very young child, he pointed out that a remarkable difference exists between the world of the child and the world of the adult which difference presents very serious difficulties in the study of young children. Too often in the past there has been insistence on the child's adoption of the adult position before the appropriate time for his mental growth had been reached. One of the most interesting and at the same time of the most important features in the world of the child was the vivid imagination peculiar to the years of childhood.

"This is at the stage when the invisible friend or other childish phantasy makes appearance," he said. "It took him a long time to fully recognize himself as a separate entity in his environment. At three years he fully recognizes that the teddy bear and the golliwog in whom he confided had no power of understanding or of effective response and then the visible inanimate was replaced by the invisible inanimate of childish phantasy."

Study of Ape

Some of the most important discoveries of the nature of the child's response to educational methods had been made through a study of the capacity for acquisition of facts of chimpanzees and other anthropoid forms. It was found through these experiments that modes of behaviour that have become a matter of course with adult humans may be expected to appear in a more plastic form in the life of the ape and the simplest acts of intelligence can in this way be brought under scientific observation. The data thus obtained was invaluable to the investigator of childish psychology.

Apart from the new attitude to the pre-school child the most important movement since 1905 is the coming of the intelligence test and its incorporation as an essential element in the general scheme of education. Probably more research has been carried out in recent years in connection with tests for intelligence than in any other department of educational activity. Even if only rough approximations could be secured in the measurement of native ability, nevertheless the advantage of such a discovery would naturally make a very strong appeal to the minds of progressive educationalists. The researches of Binet and Simon clearly point the way to attainment of a means of estimating innate intelligence. As a consequence the Binet-Simon scale has been the starting point of an enormous amount of original research on the subject which was destined to yield a rich harvest to the investigator if a really satisfactory working method of testing native ability could be obtained.

Proper Promotions

"Intelligence tests," continued Mr. Kimmins, "in connection with school organization are found to be of great value as an additional factor in promoting children from class to class. It is evident that as there is a wide range of native ability in boys and girls of the same age anything in the nature of a rigid chronological basis in school classification must be profoundly unsatisfactory. Not only that; imperfect classification may and frequently does inflict serious injury on the misplaced child. The supernormal boy or girl placed in a class with children of the same age but of markedly inferior ability runs a great risk of becoming an exceptionally lazy person though he or she may without the slightest difficulty be at the top of the form or class and be the recipient of wholly unmerited praise."

They were living in a Fool's Paradise

JACK was earning $75 a week. They had a fine apartment, lots of friends. Life was one continuous party. Then Jack took sick. First an appendix; then, as he was getting over that, "flu" set in and pneumonia developed. Jack was laid up for 15 weeks. Of course, he hadn't a penny saved, so his friends and his wife's parents had to come to their financial assistance.

But that wasn't all. If Jack had died he would have had to be buried at somebody else's expense. Why? Because he and his wife were both living for today and spent every penny that he earned.

His illness taught him a lesson. He now owns $20,000 of Confederation Life Insurance. It only costs him $12.50 a week—but it insures a life competence to Mary.

If you are married and are earning $75 a week, or more, you should own at least $20,000 of life insurance. If you are not carrying this amount, let us assist you to get it. As a preliminary, write for our pamphlet entitled "If You Were Totally Disabled." Address:

Fishing and Its Effect on Fall Fair; Romance of the Pipe Fish; Fish Houses Busy; Talk of the Convention

The fact that salmon fishing has been good this year speaks well for the prospects for the annual fair, which is being held this year at the end of August instead of in September. Everybody has been making money, natives as well as white fishermen, and if the native bands come this year there should be a great many people in the city. With a pretty good list of attractions and a good exhibition, backed with the co-operation of everybody, the results should be excellent.

The prices of halibut have been much more stable this year, which is a good thing for the industry. As long as the fishermen get around twelve cents they can make money, but when it gets much below that figure there is not much left after paying expenses.

H. T. Cross has purchased one of the seized fishing boats at Digby Island and is fitting it up for a yacht. After the little launch he has been using for the past number of years, H. T. will hardly know how to navigate a real ship.

While the weather has been bad both for fishermen and for pleasure seekers, there has been little letup in the use of the boats. At the weekend a good many parties were out.

Joe Greer and the boys faced the elements early in the week and made a trip up the Ecstall as far as Falls River and then returning navigated the Khyex for a number of miles. He got enough fish for the frying pan and had a whale of a time. He says the scenery of the upper Khyex is indescribable.

Norman Freeman of the International Fisheries Commission received a specimen of pipe fish this week from Robb Wilson, who was camping on the other side of the harbor. The fish is small and insignificant, but extremely interesting. The particular specimen was about six inches long and not as thick as a lead pencil, almost snake-like in appearance. It gets its name from its long tube-like snout at the extreme end of which are the tiny toothless jaws. Mr. Freeman points out that what is chiefly remarkable about this tiny fish is that the male has a little pouch in which the female places the eggs and which remain there until they are hatched. Then the pouch breaks and the young pipe fish are liberated. The specimen was greenish in color, but it was also pointed out that it changes color to suit its surroundings. As it was on Mr. Freeman's desk someone made an invidious remark in regard to the color. The fish lives among the seaweeds, has a small fin on its back and at the tip of the tail. There are some 150 species and the family name is Syngnathidae.

A new departure is being made by the Bacon Fisheries this year. Jim has been thinking some and the result of the effort is that he has evolved the idea of putting up pink salmon in fillets about a pound each in fifteen-pound cartons, nicely wrapped and all ready for the frying pan or oven. The fish looks most tempting and it is to be hoped the venture proves successful. The product will go as far east as Winnipeg.

Bill Shrubbsall is also a busy man. He is taking the spring salmon from the Dundas and Squaderec trollers and is mild curing it in big tierces for the New York market. Formerly this class of fish was sent to Germany, but the war changed all that. New markets had to be developed and now the fish is consumed in the American metropolis.

The fisheries convention which takes place here is arousing a lot of interest on the waterfront. It is a convention of the people who handle fish and not of the fishermen who are today much too busy on the fishing grounds to come in to the city and talk. The presence of fifty or more people interested in the fisheries business means quite a lot. They are the men that make possible the halibut and salmon fisheries of the district. T. H. Johnson and his committee are making great preparations for the event and doubtless the visitors will get such a reception as will make them remember Prince Rupert.

Some people have an idea that the people at the fisheries experimental station do not work. Perhaps they do not, but if not, why are they up all night? On more than one occasion lately the lights have been burning all night and inquiry elicits the fact that H. C. Brocklesby and his helpers are conducting experiments with pilchard oils that cannot be interrupted, not even by the call of the Brocklesby twins. It was 5 o'clock one morning when the tired scientists made their way home.

Sometimes Sheff Thompson, head of the Yacht Club staff, becomes reminiscent and when in that mood can spin a yarn as well as anybody. Sheff was one of the crew of the Brigantine Blakeley which in 1900 visited Cocos Island in search of buried treasure. Captain Keaton of St. John's, Newfoundland, brought home part of that treasure and when he died he left full particulars how to find the rest of it. Charts and letters were in the hands of Captain Hackett of Victoria and the party on arrival on the island found the location as described but after six weeks of digging discovered no treasure. Sheff says he thinks the gold is still there, Peruvian money and crown jewels. He is willing to go again if they use a hydraulic system in the search, but the weather is too hot there for much digging. It was a Captain Thompson who got away with the treasure on an English sailing ship and buried it so that the Peruvians should not get it. That was at the time of the war between Chili and Peru. Agnes Deans Cameron, the well known Victoria school teacher of those days, was one of the directors of the company that financed the expedition which was away six months on the fruitless search.

Claude Kirkendahl and Chris Elkins and their wives and families were visitors at Oceanic during the week-end.

Launch Bilmor brought in a scow load of gravel for Albert & McCaffery during the week from Forcher Island.

Harry Menzies, chief adviser for F. E. Hunt, Ltd., wants to get out of the chicken business. The long spell of rain is making his Rhode Island Reds web-footed and he does not want anybody to think he is a duck farmer. At any rate, Harry has no use for chickens now. He would sell out the business as a going concern.

Hubert Ward of electrical fame is rusticiating at Tlell, leaving the business to run itself for a week or two while he enjoys himself. He went across with the Parkers and liked Mrs. Rajoul's hospitality so well he and Mrs. Ward and the little girl had to stay another week.

Capt. Swanson has been out this week showing Mr. McFayden of Victoria his fox farm projects. They made a visit to Zayas, Rachael and Kinahan islands. It is possible Mr. McFayden may become allied with the fox industry in this part of the world.

Claude Kirkendahl's Polyanna has been up on the grid for minor repairs during the week.

Dr. Large of Port Simpson was a visitor to the Yacht Club during the week.

When Doc Clapperton has nothing to do on the Government dock he sits with his feet on the desk and thinks about football or music. Those are two subjects with which the dean of the waterfront squad is thoroughly familiar.

When Doc gets lonely Working and only Able to sit and dream, He hits with his feet On the desk so neat, With no need to get up steam.

Then Doc shut an eye, Without seeming to try, And he dreams of the days of yore; When on football field To none he would yield And he thinks of the fun in store.

Mrs. Sooby had been to one of the talkie picture shows. "Ow did you like 'em, dear?" asked a lady friend. "If I mus' tell you the truth, love," confided the other, "I'd rather 'ave gone to one of them unspeakable ones!" — Bellville Ontario.
