Vancouver Takes Reasonable View of Peace River Problem Before Premier Mackenzie King Today

VANCOUVER, Nov. 15.—Asked by President Woodward and the council of the Board of Trade here last night that an assurance be given that the Pacific coast outlet would be provided for the Peace River district, Premier Mackenzie King intimated that he would deal with the question in his address here tonight. He referred to the survey under way in Northern British Columbia which would likely determine the best pass through which the Peace River country could be reached.

In thanking the Premier for his interview, Mr. Woodward stated that the board was not so much concerned with getting the direct rail connection as it was in seeing that the outlet was at some given point on the coast. "If Prince Rupert gets it, well and good, Trade will find its level and we will run our chances of what ensues, but we do wish to see this territory further developed by a coast connection," he said.

Premier King expressed the desire of the Government to co-operate in furthering trade relations of Canada and the Orient, in answer to a request to give his sanction to the proposed excursion of Canadian businessmen to the Orient next year under the auspices of the local Board of Trade and the Canadian Chamber of Commerce.

Representation of the board of railway commissioners and the board of directors of the C.N.R. was also urged and the Premier promised early and serious consideration.

Slip Flour Sack Over Head of Nurse and Tie Her Up While They Escape

SEATTLE, Nov. 15.—Eight girls by means of a carefully pre-arranged plan got away from the detention hospital here. One of the girls feigned an epileptic fit and the others called the nurse in attendance who came immediately. While she was examining the fake patient the others crowded round and one of them slipped a flour sack over her head, tied it and the girl was then bound up so that she could not give the alarm.

PRIEST FOR FIFTY YEARS
 Golden Jubilee of Father Cocola of Fraser Lake to Be Conducted Here On Sunday

An outstanding event in the local Roman Catholic Church next Sunday will be the celebration of the Golden Jubilee of Rev. Father Cocola, O.M.I., principal of Fraser Lake Industrial School for Indians, in the priesthood. Solemn high mass will be celebrated in Annunciation Church at 10:30 Sunday morning at which Bishop Buzoz and several priests will participate. The sermon will be given by Very Rev. Father Grant of Vancouver, provincial of Oblates, who will arrive in the city from the south on the Prince George tomorrow morning. In the evening there will be a special song service by the choir. Father Cocola, who has now given half a century of his life to the priesthood, has spent all of that time in British Columbia and is well known and highly esteemed throughout the province. For the first quarter of a century, he was located in the Kootenay country and for the past twenty-five years has carried the Gospel into the central interior districts.

HOCKEY OPENED

More Goals Scored Under New Rules but Many Penalties Were Imposed

TORONTO, Nov. 15.—The great experiment of the National Hockey League met with some success and much confusion in the first tests last night. One aim of the new code of rules, that to increase scoring, was attained but misunderstandings about the defence rule brought an unexpected number of penalties. Twenty goals were scored in the four games played, while eighty-eight penalties were meted out.

The opening games resulted as follows:
 New York Rangers 2; Montreal 1.
 Boston 5; Detroit 2.
 Canadiens 3; Ottawa 3.
 Chicago 2; Toronto 2.

Dramatic Drop In Securities At Last Stayed

Advances Commenced Yesterday of From Nine to Seventeen Points

NEW YORK, Nov. 15.—Powerful influences stayed the dramatic drop in securities on the exchange here yesterday with the result that many stocks advanced from nine to seventeen points during the brief three-hour session.

After the close Secretary Mellon expressed confidence that the worst was past and Rockefeller and other financiers all spoke confidently of the soundness of the market from now on.

SEES VALUE OF RECENT LOCAL MOVE

Interior Paper Urges All Interior Communities to Back Prince Rupert

It seems that Prince Rupert has been really aroused over the Peace River outlet and that an organization, whose special duty is to get the road into that port, has been perfected and set to work, says the Omineca Herald. College yells, dinners and lots of speeches have been heard and the meals eaten, and there will be more of them as time goes on. That is the surface work. Underneath there is other work being carried on. All the interior towns, villages and communities should be solidly behind Prince Rupert. Some of the interior organizations have already passed resolutions to that effect. The others should do so at once.

This whole interior country is bound to benefit by the Peace River traffic coming this way rather than via the south. It might help a lot if Prince Rupert sent a delegate to the various organizations in the interior and help organize these districts along the same lines that have been adopted in Rupert.

Irak Premier Killed Himself Because of Taunts

BAGDAD, Irak, Nov. 15.—Sir Abdul Mushing, premier and foreign minister of Irak, who was reported to have been shot, committed suicide by shooting himself Wednesday night, according to the official announcement. ## Fishermen's Floats Contract Awarded To John Currie & Son; To Be Finished by March Next

John Currie & Son of this city have been awarded the contract by the federal department of public works for the construction of the new fishermen's floats just east of the drydock at this port, it was announced last night. It will be impossible to get the necessary material here before Christmas, so a start cannot be made until then at the earliest. The contractors hope to complete the job in March.

The contract calls for 1120 lineal feet of floats which will be fourteen feet wide and divided into several sections. There will also be a short approach and a gangway to connect the floats and the approach.

It is understood that the Pacific Stevedoring Co. was the only other tenderer on the job. The contract figure is not stated.

The new floats will take the place of the old provincial government floats at Cow Bay which have long since proven inadequate and which originally were built only as a temporary expedient. For years the federal department of public works has been urged to provide the new floats.

Exploratory Work at Anyox and Other Parts of Country

Writer Tells of Information Gleaned From Mining Records and Others

The Vancouver Province for Saturday last has an interesting article by Reece H. Hague, who told of a visit made to Anyox, where he was informed that the Granby Company were doing exploratory work which it was hoped would result in a supply of ore being found to keep the smelter going indefinitely.

Mr. Hague also told of the efforts to recover the gold from the black sands at Massett, of the activity in the Taku River district and on the Kitsumkalum River.

Congress Plans Income Tax Cut

WASHINGTON, Nov. 15.—Congress is planning to make a cut in the income tax, it was announced here, and the rediscount rate of the Federal Reserve Bank dropped from 5 to 4 1/2%. This, it is thought, will have a strengthening influence on the stock market.

Changed Status of Crown Shown By Mackenzie King in His Speech To Board of Trade at Vancouver

VANCOUVER, Nov. 15.—Establishment of Canadian legations with France, United States and Japan was a good thing for the British Empire as well as for Canada, Premier Mackenzie King declared in addressing the Board of Trade dinner here last night. Misunderstandings between a foreign country and any part of the British Empire must eventually affect all other parts. The placing of Canada's and the Empire's position in its true light before other peoples would tend to prevent misunderstandings. It demonstrated to the world that a community of nations under one crown, a crown "broadbased upon the people's will," a crown broadbased, not only on the will of the people of the British Isles, but on the peoples of the dominions as well.

ALD. ORME FOR MAYOR

Is Being Convassed to Run Despite His Statement That He Has Not Time

The name of Ald. C. H. Orme is beginning to loom prominently on the horizon as far as discussion of mayoralty candidates at the forthcoming civic election is concerned. Though he has already stated that his business would not permit him to take over the duties of chief magistrate, it is understood that he is being pressed to reconsider the matter.

Should he be a candidate, it is said that, besides being accorded a heavy support by business interests of the city, he would get a substantial measure of backing from organized labor. There is also understood to be a possibility that one of the already announced candidates for mayoralty might choose to withdraw in favor of Ald. Orme.

EMPIRE FREE TRADE

The editor of The Daily News is in receipt of a personally signed letter from Lord Beaverbrook, publisher of the London Express, along with a booklet entitled "Empire Free Trade," written by himself. He calls it "The New Policy For Prosperity," and in it he urges the organization of the units of the British Empire in a somewhat similar manner to that in which the different states of the union are organized against the rest of the world. He says that instead of competition there should be co-operation between them. Instead of fluctuating markets and the underselling of British products by foreign goods manufactured with sweated labor, there would be a wide and steady demand and full protection for hours, wages and prices throughout the whole Empire. "The greatest political unit in the world would become also the greatest economic unit, and a new era of prosperity would open for the whole British race."

Lord Beaverbrook calls his movement the Empire Crusade and its policy is summed up as follows:

1. The Empire is to be regarded as a single economic group, and trade between the various parts subject to qualifications, is to suffer no restrictions.
2. The interests of this group are to be conserved by a tariff wall against the rest of the world.
3. Within this group the economic interests of the parts are to be strengthened by a policy of agreements, quotas and compensations.

IS IT PRACTICABLE?

The concluding paragraph in the article by the well known British publisher and statesman is that it is a new policy, a practicable policy and the only policy that offers a real return to national and imperial prosperity.

It is difficult to discuss offhand a policy that is so new and which is so far-reaching in its scope. Canada undoubtedly made the first move toward such an end when Sir Wilfrid Laurier instituted the policy of British preference in the markets of Canada. This policy has been further emphasized by the present Government and doubtless will be continued and possibly extended. If the other Dominions would carry out a similar policy it would not be long before the Empire might be ready for at least a modified system of Imperial preference if not Imperial free trade. The change will have to come gradually as any sudden transition would undoubtedly cause too great a dislocation of trade and consequent injury to many established interests. The move would be experimental and therefore would have to be approached with caution.

THE ALASKA HIGHWAY

Alaska newspapers are telling Prince Rupert how they should conduct their own affairs, especially in connection with the highway which they wish to see built. We suggest that highway building is our own business and not theirs. We have certain needs which are prior to theirs. For instance, Prince Rupert has been needing a highway for years and finds itself against a stone wall of indifference when it comes to asking for it. Until that reasonable demand is satisfied Prince Rupert will make regular protests, no matter who the apologists for the American road proposal may be.

PEACE PACT ADVERTISING

Premier King would like to see a copy of the Peace Pact hanging in every school in Canada and is willing to co-operate to secure that end. This is a good advertisement for peace and probably much better than war scenes which are now hanging in some school rooms in the city.

Today people are learning to glorify peace rather than war. The objective is an excellent one and worthy of all support.

VANCOUVER IS INJURED BY SCRIBES

Foolishness of Newspaper Writers of Big City Illustrated
By a Story

(Stewart News)
Commenting editorially upon the recent death of Fred G. Dawson of Prince Rupert, the Vancouver Sun has once more shown its antagonism to anything tending to develop Northern British Columbia at the expense (supposedly) of the city of Vancouver. After a brief eulogy, the Sun goes on to say:

"But how much better Mr. Dawson could have served the province and the railway had he been a citizen of Vancouver rather than a citizen of Prince Rupert. Living apart from the commercial and industrial centre of British Columbia, his splendid abilities were stultified by the geographical limitations of his field of operations."

"As a C.N.R. director in Prince Rupert, he was useful and valuable. As a C.N.R. director in Vancouver, he would have been doubly useful and doubly valuable."

"Vancouver is not trying to aggrandize herself at the expense of the smaller British Columbia cities. But the fact remains that with more than half the population of the province, Vancouver must be the centre of provincial development. British Columbia can be no more prosperous than Vancouver. The industries and business of this city are the touchstone of British Columbia's economic status."

"The highly regrettable death of Mr. Dawson, honored and respected throughout the whole province, leaves a vacancy in the directorate of the Canadian National Railways that can only be filled by a Vancouver man who can measure up to the abilities of Mr. Dawson."

The old saying of "live and learn" still holds good, and we quote the above editorial from the Vancouver Sun of Oct. 31st, as proof thereof. Until we followed the editorials in that esteemed daily, we were of the opinion that Vancouver was a city stuck away down in the southwest corner of British Columbia, deriving its existence to a large extent from the development of British Columbia which in turn, we thought, was dependent for its growth upon the vast natural resources with which the Almighty so richly endowed this great country.

But evidently we were mistaken, and at last we are commencing to see the light, thanks to the Vancouver Sun editorials. At last we are beginning to realize that our vision of B.C. was all a myth; that in reality B.C. is not a great territory filled with natural wealth that will make great cities, but rather a vast expanse of country dependent upon Vancouver, to which it contributes nothing, for its very existence.

Of course, like all other British Columbians, we now see the light. We hasten to salaam to that superior wisdom and agree when the Sun says in part:

"Vancouver must be the centre of provincial development. British Columbia can be no more prosperous than Vancouver."

There is only one angle of this question we do not understand, and that is, why British Columbia? If Vancouver is so vital to the prosperity and interests of this great territory, why not call it the Province of Vancouver.

But Not the Ass
The editor of this paper has been thrown into considerable doubt as to the wisdom of certain expressions in the above reference to the Vancouver Sun editorials. When he wrote the above observations yesterday, he thought a great truth was dawning upon him, but on going to bed last night with such a weight on his mind, he had a dream. In this dream he thought he was Vancouver on his way to heaven, and the trails followed (like all northern roads and trails) were very rough and muddy. At the end of the last, long, rough and muddy stretch, all worn out and tired, he was confronted with a long and high golden stair. Though weary unto death, there was no alternative but up this long stair he must climb and at the top he came to a door on which he knocked. From the other side came the sonorous voice of St. Peter:

"Who knocks and what do you want?"

"The Great Vancouver," said the editor, "I want to enter heaven."

"What are your qualifications?" asked St. Peter.

"Though a great city, I made a great country," said the editor.

"Are you mounted or afoot?"

"Afoot."

"Then you cannot enter here," said St. Peter.

Great was the disappointment, but there was nothing to be done but go back down the stairs and over those rough, muddy trails and roads. Presently he came to a great, burly giant, whom he recognized as his erstwhile champion, the Vancouver Daily Sun. Seeing something was wrong, the Sun asked the trouble and got a recital of the great disappointment.

"Why," said the Sun, "go back and demand to be let in to your proper place in heaven."

"No," said Vancouver, "I am too tired and the road is too rough."

"Let that not deter you," said the Sun. "Here climb upon my back and I will carry you."

So Vancouver climbed upon the back of the valiant Sun and was carried back over those bad roads and trails up the long golden stair to the door. Again Vancouver knocked, and again came the voice of St. Peter, asking:

"Who knocks and what do you want?"

"The Great Vancouver," said the editor, "I want to enter and take my place in heaven."

"Are you mounted or afoot?"

"Being still on the back of the valiant Daily Sun, Vancouver replied:

"Enter," said St. Peter, "but tie your ass outside."

CHANGES IN MANAGERS OF HOCKEY

MONTREAL, Nov. 15.—The National Hockey League season opens with five new managers, including three of the playing variety. The three active managers include Duncan Munro, former Montreal captain and defence man, now on the Maroons' defence; Frank Frederickson, star centre, who has replaced Odie Cleghorn at Pittsburgh; and Lionel Conacher, big defence man, who succeeds Tommy Gorman in New York. The two others are Tom Shaughnessy at Chicago—the only American-born manager in the big league, who is in charge of the Black Hawks; and Newy Lalonde at Ottawa, last season's Niagara Falls in the International League. Lalonde is coach with Dave Gill, former bench manager, now acting as business manager of the Ottawa club.

Dunc Munro, who replaced Eddie Gerard at Montreal, will be assisted by Dr. Jerry Laflamme, former N.H.L. referee. Gerard retired from hockey owing to ill-health.

Other leaders remain the same—Lester Patrick, New York Rangers; Art Ross, Boston Bruins—Stanley Cup holders—and Jack Adams, Detroit; Connie Smythe, Toronto; and Cecil Hart, Canadiens.

Labor Council Holds Meeting

Northern B.C. Salmon Fishermen Seek Affiliation; Report Given On Rail Convention; Banquet Idea Revived

Mike Anderson, secretary of the Northern B. C. Salmon Fishermen's Association, addressed the Prince Rupert Trades & Labor Council at its regular meeting last night with a view to having the fishermen's organization affiliated with the labor council. The matter will be further gone into at the annual convention next week of the fishermen's association.

E. W. Tucker, delegate to the recent Railway Brotherhood convention in Kansas City, gave the council an interesting review of the doings at that gathering.

Municipal affairs were discussed but no action was taken. The matter will be taken up again at the next meeting of the council.

The council decided to revive the idea of having an annual Labor banquet and a committee consisting of James Black, Ald. W. M. Brown and J. J. Gillis was appointed to make arrangements for that event which will be held late this month or early in December.

The meeting was well attended and enthusiastic. Ald. S. D. Macdonald, the president, occupied the chair.

From morning until closing time these last few days, there has been a steady stream of buyers thronging the store and the bell of the cash register kept up a steady tinkle.

The values at the Louvre of course is the one reason. And in this selling off event, never before have the Louvre been able to give such values. Their customers know it. Just visit the Louvre and see for yourself. It will pay you.

This sale will continue until the stock is gone. But don't wait until the end—come now while the choice is still good.—Adv't.

IF YOU COULD SEE HIM TO-DAY

Biliousness and Constipation gone—Thanks to "FRUIT-A-TIVES"

Health, vigour, energy—perfect regulation of the kidneys and bowels—sound sleep and good appetite—how they all re-appear to make life worth living, as soon as you take the marvelous medicine "Fruit-a-tives," made from fruit juices combined with the finest medicinal ingredients.

Mr. Emery Lemay knows this. Writing from 88 St. Famille St., Montreal, he states, "I was always constipated and bilious, which made me feel tired and out-of-sorts. One day a travelling man recommended 'Fruit-a-tives.' You should see me to-day—in perfect health, full of energy, and the constipation all gone."

This is one of the great virtues of "Fruit-a-tives"—its wonderful cleansing powers. It acts on the three great eliminating organs, the bowels, kidneys and skin, keeping the body free of waste, purifying the blood, building up strength and energy. Try them. 25c. and 50c. a box—at dealers everywhere.

INSTALLMENT XIII.

"I think it is very wonderful," she declared, "and I think that you are all very brave."

"For one thing," he admitted soberly, "I am thankful. We have kept our spirit. Now, we shall speak no more of politics. I would like you to tell me more about your friend."

"There isn't much to tell," Miss Brown confided. "She and I have both the same dull history. She was the daughter of a small country doctor and I was the daughter of a struggling lawyer. Both suffered through the war, died and left no money. Frances tried living with relatives, but gave it up. She attempted a tea shop, but that became impossible. Now she has a small chicken farm, but I think that she is very miserable. She is too bright and clever to be buried in the country."

"And too beautiful," Paul murmured. "She saw a momentary wistful-ness in his eyes and sighed. Poor Mr. Paul, with a father and a mother and a sister to keep—a maitre d'hotel by day and a professional dancer by night! She struggled against a wave of melancholy.

"A holiday," she begged. "Just for a short time let us forget every one who is unhappy and think only of joyful things."

His smile was a little sad, but he entered into her spirit.

"Tell me instead, then," he begged, "just where you were brought up? Tell me under what sun you were born where the eyes are painted such a color."

She laughed softly.

"That's better," she approved. "All my history, all that has happened to me up till last night, I could tell you before we reached the next lamp-post."

"Your loves?"

"I have had none."

"Your ambitions?"

"I am much too practical to be a dreamer," she assured him.

He shook his head.

"You may have always thought so," he said, "but you were made for romance, and I think that romance has you now fairly in its grip. You will live through wonderful days, Miss Brown, before you go back again to the life you led before you sat upon the steps of Dessiter's house."

She nodded thoughtfully.

"It was very damp there," she murmured, "and the fog was terrible, and what followed terrified me more than I should like to confess, and yet I suppose you are right. I think I shall be glad all my life that I lost my way."

And then, without any warning, the world with Miss Brown was engaged seemed to drop back again to exactly where it had been before. For many days nothing whatever happened to disturb the serenity of her existence. Each morning after she had scanned the personal column of the Times, she visited her clients in the various districts of the city, and during the afternoon she typed.

Once or twice she went to lunch at Paul's restaurant, and on each occasion was warmly welcomed. It was Paul from whom she gained much of her information as to the trend of events, and one day, after long consideration, she asked him a question.

"Mr. Paul," she said, "you know about everything. Why am I not allowed to finish the task I began? Every day things throughout the country seem to become worse, the men's leaders are permitted to talk the rankest treason, and we do nothing."

He made her a sign of caution and later on came and sat at her table.

"You know what an anarchist is, Miss Brown?" he asked.

Miss Brown assented.

"I didn't understand properly until quite lately," she admitted. "I've been reading things up."

"An anarchist is a senseless soulless machine of death," Paul declared, "but there is just one feature about him—the death he dispenses to others he does not fear himself. There are about 200 of them distributed about London. Abel Dessiter and the more respectable portion of the Communist Party give them the cold shoulder, but the others are willing enough to make use of them. They know very well the bank where the record of Dessiter's work is deposited. They watch it even now day and night. I can only conclude that the reason Dessiter's political executors don't communicate with you is that they don't want any risk of the book being destroyed in a fight—and there would be a fight, if any one attempted to fetch it away."

"Couldn't it be taken away in the night in a prison van or something?" Miss Brown asked.

"They could blow a prison van to pieces in two seconds," Paul replied, "make a matchwood of it. Then there's another trouble."

He hesitated. Miss Brown's blue eyes were full of questioning.

"I have had a hint," he continued thoughtfully, "that the Communists have a spy planted in the bank. That is what makes the authorities reluctant to move."

"If they don't do something soon it will be too late," Miss Brown pointed out. "Do you know, Mr. Paul, I believe I could do nearly the whole of the work—the part of it that counted, I mean—from memory? I shouldn't use the same words, perhaps, but the sense of it all would be there."

"But where would you do it?" he asked.

"Where?" she replied wonderingly.

He smiled.

"Where?" he asked her. "That no single movement on your part passes unrecorded? Those fellows have got tabs on you all the time. It is quite certain they know that you are dining here to-night. One or two of them will escort you home, even though you may not realize it. The sound of your typewriter in that little bed-sitting room of yours would bring them around you like locusts after honey."

"Surely they could find some safe place for me to work," Miss Brown protested with a little shiver.

"It is worth considering," Paul reflected. "And yet one must think of Dessiter's work that is needed—it is the documents. It is their publication which is going to bring down the storm. What those documents may be, I alas, do not know, but I can guess. It was I who helped procure the report of Noel Frankland's speech in Moscow. If the Government decides to publish that, no one would believe any more that any one of the party has any idea of such a thing as a bloodless revolution. You have not read the report of that speech, Miss Brown?"

She shook her head.

"I did not look at any of the papers," she replied. "It was not necessary."

Paul tapped with his finger upon the table.

"Frankland went too far even for him," he said. "I believe it is true that he had been what Englishmen call 'in a devil of a funk' ever since. He was filled with Russian champagne and he spoke to please them. He gave the actual names of five prominent Englishmen who he swore should be hung in front of their own houses and he wound up by saying he only hoped that he would be near enough to give the rope a pull."

"That horrible man," Miss Brown murmured.

A Dangerous Man

"You can realize now," Paul continued, "how angry I was when I saw him dancing with your friend. He is not a man she should know, Miss Brown. I wish you could persuade her of that. Could you not bring her here again?" he went on a little wistfully. "There is so much I should like to say to her."

Miss Brown studied him for a moment, and sighed ever so slightly. Somewhere buried in a corner of her heart the pain of her own brief hour of romance still lingered, yet she was young to pass all her life with the ashes of memory, and Paul was in his way attractive. She liked his drawn, serious face, his hesitating yet usually so correct speech, his deferential air. She liked, too, the smile which sometimes made him handsome.

"I will see what I can do," she promised, when she took her leave. And as it happened on the very next evening, quite unexpectedly, Frances appeared. She made her usual gay and somewhat exuberant entrance, but she was pale and it seemed to her friend, watching her anxiously, that there were signs of trouble in her face.

"Tell me all the news, you mysterious little moth," she invited, throwing off her hat, curling herself up on the bed and lighting a cigarette. "I've a whole budget, myself."

"Nothing has happened up here," Miss Brown declared. "I have just done my work, gone to bed at night and got up in the morning. What's been happening with you?"

"Oh, no end of things," Frances declared, flicking the ash from the end of her cigarette—"mostly connected with one cosmopolitan acquaintance, Mr. Noel Frankland."

Miss Brown looked grave. There was nothing in her mind more certain than the fact that she disliked Mr. Frankland very much.

"Tell me everything, please," she invited.

"Well, he wrote and asked if he could motor down and see me, so I invited him to tea."

"Well?"

Frances made a little grimace. Her speech became slower. She spoke as though the subject was distasteful to her.

"He came twice—behaved in the usual fashion. The second time he told me that he was married."

"I shouldn't think," Miss Brown said soberly, "that that would matter much to you except that under the circumstances he ought not to have come and called upon you at all. Do you really think that he is a nice man, Frances?"

"Nice? Of course, he isn't nice," was the impatient rejoinder. "I don't think that any men are nice nowadays. He told me that he was married in one breath and asked me to motor down to Hastings with the next. He suggested Brighton first, but thought that Hastings might be quieter. And then he reminded me that he was a public man whose movements always attracted a great deal of attention."

"Beast!" Miss Brown exclaimed emphatically.

"Yes," Frances agreed. "I felt like that exactly. It's a good word and yet I wanted to go."

"You don't really like him?" Miss Brown gasped.

Frances threw away the end of her cigarette.

"I think in a way, that he's detestable," she replied. "I understand him better than he thinks, and that is the conclusion I have come to. He's coarse and he's domineering, and he's almost humorously egotistical, but he has power, Edith, and a quaint, impressive kind of virility. He makes me realize all the time that he's a man. Some of them don't."

"I hope that you're not going to see him again," Miss Brown said anxiously.

Frankland's Intrigues

Frances shrugged her shoulders.

"I don't know. When it comes to the pinch, you know, I'm rather finicky. I hate his ill-made clothes, his braggadocio, his ranting speeches. I hate all of them, but—"

"I don't know whether you can understand this—he seems to bring with him such an atmosphere of vivid life, and I'm getting to hate my chickens, Edith; to wish I lived upon a hill or somewhere else. A muddy lane and some buildings with tin roofs, that is all I can see from my windows—and rain. It always rains. There are always long patches of flood in the meadow. The evenings there are horrible. I try to read—I can't. I think physically I'm too much alive to sit still and use my brain only. I want something for my eyes to rest upon with pleasure, music for my body to move to, warmth—we can only get a handful of coals there down in the country now, since they have begun to talk about this strike—and plenty of light. Somehow or other whatever sort of lamp we buy seems to smoke and smell."

"Well, anyhow, you're up for the night now, aren't you?" Miss Brown reminded her cheerfully. "We'll go out somewhere and have a good time. You haven't made any plans?" she added, with suddenly anxiety.

NOT exactly his regular face . . . but who couldn't forgive any ordinary, everyday man for giving way to his feelings when a plate of steaming, tempting CLARK'S CHICKEN SOUP is placed before him.

Plump chickens . . . healthy chickens . . . the kind there used to be when the old open fire in the kitchen did all the cooking . . . a juicy, tender chicken swinging to and fro . . . the flames eagerly licking around it . . . the gravy oozing out . . .

A-a-a-ah! a soup made from chickens such as those . . . wouldn't you love . . . don't you crave it . . . then, why don't you have it? It's here . . . CLARK'S CHICKEN SOUP!
