He suggested three subjects for discussion: Removal of the many irritating barriers now retarding trade within the empire; creating of a better understanding within the Dominions on the economic value of buying within the empire and the promotion of a drive to adopt or improve upon modern methods of lowering manufacturing costs aided by advertising and salesmanship.

SMITHERS, Aug. 14.—Speaking here last night en route to Prince George, the Conservative leader, R. B. Bennett, protested against the claim of the Dominion Government for responsibility for any prosperity in Canada. Credit for this was due to the governments of the different provinces and the efforts of the Canadian people.

Permits So Far This Year Represent Value of $69,890, as Against $141,975 in 1928

With no very large projects so far under way, the building trade has been quiet in Prince Rupert during the year to date, the value being placed at a total of $69,890, as against $141,975 during the first seven months of 1928. Last year's list included the Capitol Theatre then under construction.

Permits for July this year represented a value of $15,675, as against $16,500 in the same month last year.

Forest Fires in South Proving Real Danger and Many Men are Being Employed Fighting Them

NELSON, Aug. 14.—With 150 fires burning, the forest fire situation in the southern interior is reported critical by local forestry officials. All available unemployed men in this district have been called upon to fight the outbreaks.

The most serious situation exists at Tunnel, in the boundary district, where fire-fighters are doing their best without the aid of water. The fire at Westbridge is also out of control. At Sheep Creek, on the international boundary, it is under control. Additional men have been taken there today. So dense is the smoke that the forestry seaplane is unable to leave the water owing to poor visibility.

VANCOUVER, Aug. 14.—The forest fire situation on the lower mainland and Vancouver Island is extremely hazardous. Fires are menacing large tracts of standing timber in the vicinity of Campbell River and winds are fanning an outbreak at Thurston Bay. Four new fires are reported near Duncan and Nanaimo and crews from the Canadian Collieries at Wellington augmented the forestry crews, so serious is the situation deemed around the coal centre.

Buildings have been destroyed near Alder, in the Fraser Valley, where several new outbreaks have been reported. A fire near Mission has been stopped all but the burning top of the mountain after burning over logged-off land.

The local forestry office reports that there are no fires in this district and have been none of any importance since June.

MANSON SPEAKS TO GYRO CLUB

Tells About Work Done at Inter-Provincial Conference Two Years Ago

The Gyro Club members and many guests heard a fine address at luncheon in the Commodore Cafe yesterday, with Joseph Greer presiding, from A. M. Manson, K.C., M.L.A., who chose to speak on some of the problems of Canada as seen at the inter-provincial conference at Ottawa two years ago, which he attended as attorney-general of British Columbia at that time. Mr. Manson was in his usual good form and his remarks, though of impromptu nature, were greatly appreciated by the audience, which was unusually large for a club luncheon.

Before launching upon his discourse, Mr. Manson expressed his pleasure at being back, even if it were for a short time, in Prince Rupert among old friends.

The speaker described the picturesque and impressive setting of the inter-provincial conference at Ottawa. He recalled how the press had been excluded in order that the representatives of the Dominion and provinces might have no other concern than that of

BRITISH PREFERENCE

It is rather curious that the proposals made by R. B. Bennett in regard to the tariff, which include the practical shelving of the British preference, should be supported so strongly by most of the people who are usually so strong for everything British. Some of the people who attended Mr. Bennett's lecture stated afterwards that they considered the speech the strongest possible argument for union with the United States. If our only natural market were cut off to the south and if there was to be no British preference, and if, as stated by Mr. Bennett, practically all other countries were raising their tariff against Canada, there would soon be no market left for Canadian goods and fiscal union with the States would be the only alternative. Indeed, following the meeting, it was freely expressed by more than one that the best thing for North America would be a fiscal union which would include the right to pass north and south of the boundary at will and would do away altogether with the customs barriers.

We are not suggesting this just now as a Canadian policy. It was the speech of Mr. Bennett which indirectly suggested it. What we suggest is that doing away with the British preference is a dangerous thing unless we wish to break the British connection altogether. It looks to us as if Mr. Bennett would have us shout British and act American.

OUTSTANDING QUESTIONS

There are two outstanding matters before the world today. One is the final adjustment of the German reparations payments, as a result of the war, over which the powers of Europe have been snarling for the past week. The other is the quarrel between Russia and China over control of the Chinese Railway, built largely by Russia on Chinese territory. With Russia cultivating a feeling that all the world is against her, and with China just being aroused to a feeling of nationalism which resents foreign control of her territory, the Manchurian question is undoubtedly the most difficult to settle and may possibly result in a resort to arms. This, it is hoped, will be avoided, as conflagrations are apt to spread. The whole world would be opposed to Russian domination of China, and for that reason the sympathy of most people is with the Chinese.

LABOR ON TRIAL

Labor has been on trial in the international controversy going on at The Hague and Philip Snowden has so far showed up well. He is likely to be looked upon as an outstanding figure among leaders of the party from this time on. Should Ramsay Macdonald at any time in the near future retire, Snowden will probably make a bid for the leadership. Any man who can withstand the powers of Europe as he has done at The Hague must have sufficient force of character to lead the party at home, it would seem. On the outcome of the present conference much will depend. Should it break without a settlement, Snowden will be looked upon upon as an obstructionist. If he can swing Europe to his viewpoint, he will be a statesman of the first calibre. Nothing succeeds like success.

working as a single mind, in spite of politics or other affiliations, for the good of their country. There had been adopted a spirit of fair and equitable dealing, compromise and mutual assistance. Many differences, both geographical and economical, had had to be overcome in the spirit of the gathering.

Concluding his preface, Mr. Manson touched briefly upon the various subjects that had been discussed, giving his personal views on some of the matters. It had been realized that changes were necessary to bring the British North America Act up to modern requirements. In the matter of the senate, there were none who favored its abolition, but there was a unanimous feeling that its members should be imbued with more responsibility to the people, so that it would be more than an obstructionist body.

Taxation, and its meaning and allocation under the constitution, had been a matter of much discussion. It was felt that there should be devised some more equi-able means for the distribution of capital subsidy which was now governed on the basis of population as recorded every ten years by the Dominion census.

Railways

Railways had also come in for considerable consideration. It had been suggested, and Mr. Manson felt it was sound policy, that the provincial railways, being to considerable extent Dominion affairs, should be taken off the hands of the provinces and incorporated with one or the other of the two great national systems.

Dominion subsidies for scientific research had also been urged and Mr. Manson felt that such would do much to establish Canadian accomplishments with those of the other nations.

On immigration there had been diversity of opinion, but Mr. Manson himself felt that a middle course should be adopted. The Dominion should bring in such immigrants of good character and quality as she could absorb. The country did not want hyphenated Canadians, no matter whence they came, but should develop a national spirit of its own. As for British immigrants, Canada needed the best blood and not the drifters who would be no better in this country than they were in their own.

Mr. Manson referred to what he dubbed "humbbug" in the matter of the Oriental situation which was made so often a political football. He had nothing but utter contempt for the glib platform speaker who would decry the Oriental and employ him in his business, in his garden or in his industry. Nevertheless, there was a real menace here which could best be realized in British Columbia, where there had been great penetration. Miracles could not be performed, but he believed that something had to be done and done quickly. If possible, he favored doing it in a friendly way. Assimilation of the Canadian and Oriental races could never be successfully brought about.

Problems could but be presented at the conference and, while no decisions had been made in the way of passing resolutions, there had been a frank interchange of opinions in the endeavor to do things that would give Canada her proper place in the Empire. It had been agreed that there should be no partial but rather national consideration, so that one part might not be unbalanced by over-balancing the other with concessions.

School and Church

In concluding his address, Mr. Manson urged that for a real national foundation there should be sound education coupled with true religion. For the success of the nation, the school and the church should go hand in hand. When religion disappeared, education was of little avail. In giving service all could play a part in the national development.

Another feature of the luncheon were vocal solos by Hawthorne Dunn, who was accompanied by Ewart Lyne.

The Escape

But Summers was feeling decidedly qualmish. The cigarette did not look like just an ordinary cigarette to him. Besides, he thought he saw a look of great intensity behind the cornered man's mocking smile. And he had seen many an apparently innocent act of the Picaroon's turn out surprisingly in the past.

While four pairs of eyes stared at him the Picaroon leaned lightly against the chair that served him as a bulwark, and continued blowing smoke with outward placidity. The handcuffs hung limply from Carrigan's hand. Summers' attention was divided between his pistol and the Picaroon's cigarette. Ferryman appeared extremely ill at ease. Axelson, his shoulders hunched up and his head hung low, moistened his lips and twisted his neck. Three of them had heard of the Picaroon's subtle little trickeries; one of them had experienced them in a personal and humiliating way.

And as he smoked, the Picaroon's brain threw out thoughts as a beaten iron from the fire throws out sparks. He was in no mood to enjoy the stupefaction created by his cigarette. It gave him a little time for thought, but his thoughts rebounded against obstructions everywhere, and the spell might break any moment now. He could see no loophole. The Picaroon's star of luck appeared to have set at last.

Again his eyes roved about the room, fixed briefly on Axelson's lowered face, and then he looked at Summers' reddish countenance. "Thanks for the delay," he murmured with a shrug. "I'm enjoying this cigarette."

Then he pushed the chair aside and stepped out from the corner. Carrigan's chest heaved out as if to form a barricade. The pistol in Summers' hand rose a trifle higher. He was about to call a halt, but he desisted. Nothing the Picaroon might do would avail him now. He was caught in the net, and there was a sportive instinct in Summers which wanted to see the quarry's final, hopeless flop against the meshes.

The Picaroon flung the cigarette away. Three pair of eyes followed its curve through the air and saw it land in the fireplace. Carrigan made a motion with the steel links. Disgust and relief were written in Summers' face.

"Summers," said the Picaroon gently, "you are a blundering ass."

The captain reddened and thrust out his topheavy head like a belligerent ox.

"You have a genius for making a fool of yourself," the Picaroon pursued. "But then you are a policeman and the rating of the police for intelligence was never very high. You're hopeless—I have tried to educate you, but it's no use. Why, you are such a perpetual duffer that if a man lights a cigarette you think it's going to explode and blow your poor head off. Why don't you laugh at yourself?"

"Oh, I'll laugh," said Summers with heavy sarcasm. "No, you won't. You will eat humble pie. Well, here I am. Arrest me. Have your laugh. Mine will come later."

With a slack and indolent gait he walked up to Summers, pausing only when the captain's automatic touching his midriff.

"But before you make the crowning mistake of your life," he said gently, "wouldn't you like me to show you the murderer of Mrs. Ferryman?"

Summers uttered a hoarse below. Axelson lumbered forward. The Picaroon had executed a sudden spring, light and swift as a thought and now he seized Axelson by the scuff of the neck and with a powerful swing brought him so close to Summers that their faces all but touched. "Here is the murderer," he said calmly. "Look him over."

Axelson squirmed and puffed and bleated. He was like a figure of straw in the Picaroon's firm clutch. "Him?" Summers chortled derisively. "No, Dale, that trick won't work. You're playing for time."

The Picaroon, still holding the servant so close to Summers that their noses almost rubbed together, cast a swift glance over the room, and for an instant his eyes fastened on Ferryman, who was witnessing the scene with a look of gaping stupefaction.

"Tell him," he whispered in Axelson's ear, but loud enough for Summers to hear, "about Miss Conway."

Abruptly the servant's struggle ceased. It was as if the whisper had hurled a numbing jolt into his body. A look of terror came into his face, congealing into a grimace that showed a guilty conscience stirred to the depths. Summers stared at him. The derision faded out of his face, its line tightened in a look of astonishment and suspicion. For a moment or two all his faculties were bent upon reading the secret in the servant's eyes.

The Picaroon watched his chance. In another second the mask might drop back over Axelson's features, concealing a black and twisted heart's involuntary revelation. With a vigorous shove from behind he knocked Axelson's head into the captain's face. In almost the same instant his hand darted out and wrenched the automatic from Summers' limp hand.

Then, quick as an arrow, he glided backward across the floor. Summers, reeling back from the sudden impact, emitted a howl of rage and frustration. He wiped a reddish trickle from his nose and steadied himself. Axelson was picking himself up from the floor. It took Carrigan a moment or two to recover from his daze. Now, with automatic leveled, his huge shoulders squared for action, he hurled himself at the Picaroon.

But with a soft laugh and a light leap the Picaroon eluded the charging giant. A quick dodge, and he was at the wall. A little click, and darkness swooped down upon a scene of tumult.

"The door!" Summers bellowed. "Don't let him—"

A crash of breaking glass drowned his shout.

"The window! Quick! Ferryman, the lights!"

A hubbub sounded outside the window. The lights blazed up again.

"We've got him!" cried a voice outside.

With a hoarse cry of relief Summers sprang to the window. A street lamp half a block distant revealed two uniformed men struggling with their prisoner. It was a brief struggle. Their captive was quickly subdued.

"Caught him just as he jumped out the window," one of them triumphantly announced.

Summers crawled over the sill and dropped to the street level. In the dim light he glanced at the prisoner.

"Oh, hell!" he exclaimed with heartfelt disgust. "That isn't the Picaroon! How in blazes did you get out here, Axelson?"

The servant, limp and shaken and disheveled, struggled for breath.

"Some — somebody threw me out," he stammered.

Dr. Moffett's Ultimatum

At 1 o'clock the following day, Captain Summers walked into a restaurant in the Washington Square section and grumpily sat down at the table in the rear.

"Soup, veal cutlet, coffee — make it snappy," he growled at the waiter.

The soup came and he consumed it with a grim and petulant air, as if it irritated his esophagus. He attacked the veal cutlet savagely, as if to vent his ill humor on it. Suddenly he looked up.

"Hello, Summers," drawled a familiar voice.

Summers stared. His eyes protruded, his lips hung slack.

"Say, where in the name of Sam Hill did you come from?" His voice was dull, hollow, full of flabbergastation.

"Home," said Dale. He dusted the seat with the napkin and sat down with one of his little flourishes. He looked fresh and keen and without a care. "Don't look at me like that, old socks. I am full of serenity and cosmic harmonies, and you are trying to inject gloom into my soul, waiter!"

He studied the card carefully and gave his order.

"I've had men out looking for you all morning," said Summers weakly.

"Too bad. Had I known it, I should have communicated with you. Anything special?"

Summers swallowed hard. His emotions seemed too deep for words. In the end he resorted to heavy sarcasm.

"Oh, no—nothing special. Just wanted to listen to your bright patter and ask a question or two."

"For instance?"

"Well, I was just curious to know where you spent the hours between 2 o'clock and sunrise."

"Your curiosity is insatiable, old top." Dale studied the omelet that had just arrived and nodded approval. "Let me see. I spent the evening at a roof garden. Dreadful bore! Take my advice and don't spend your hard-earned money to see 'The Nude Veracities.'" Then—oh, yes, I ordered my car and took a spin out to City Island. Wonderful moonlight effects over the water! You should have been along, you frostbitten old sour face. The sight would have mellowed your crusty temper."

"Yeah?" Summers peered feebly. "Tell me about the moon. Maybe your description of it will do me as much good as if I had seen the whole blame show."

"I fear I can't do it justice. A sight of that sort requires a poet's wonderful touch. A measureless expanse of water rippling gently beneath a silver shimmer. A luminous track extending seaward. A ship in the distance, a ghostly blur on the horizon. The magic and sorcery of the lunar radiance. No, Summers' words fail me, I can't do it."

"Oh, try again," Summers encouraged. "You might be a little more explicit. Was it a full moon or three quarters moon, or what?"

"Three quarters. Of course, I didn't measure it—"

"I guess you didn't," said Summers dryly. He took a swallow of coffee. "And the reason you didn't was that there was no moon to measure. It was cloudy last night."

Around The World With Sport Fans

(By The Tramp)

Announcement has been made that A. M. Orpen, owner of the Long Branch race course, would equip his plant in 1930 with what is known as the automatic totalizer. The machine has been invented by Harry C. Pass, a Toronto mechanical engineer, and while it has been criticized favorably by racing interests in the United States and the British Isles, it remained for Mr. Orpen to assist the young inventor by adopting the machine. It is said that Mr. Pass encountered considerable opposition from firms whose business it is to sell the parimutual ticket to racing associations. The machine consists of a battery of machines, electrically operated, built on the principle of the adding machine. The customer purchases his ticket, the clerk presses several buttons and hands the ticket to him. At the same time, the ticket is registered on a board. The moment each sale is made, indicators on the board, on the infield of the course, reveal to the public the amount of wagering.

GIANTS BEATEN BY CINCINNATI

Three Homers in Game Between Tigers and Athletics in Big League Baseball

NEW YORK, Aug. 14.—Rixey scattered ten Gian! hits in the final game of the series of five, of which the Reds won three, with the result that the Giants were beaten yesterday three to one.

Carlson held the Braves to six hits, but in the fifth Boston took a two to nil lead, only to lose it in the next four innings, ending the game two runs down.

These were the only two games in the National League. In the American, Wiley More, relief pitcher for the Yankees, was greeted by Hodapp's triple in the ninth, which brought two runs and won the game for Cleveland.

Hale, McManus and Fox socked homers in the game between the Tigers and Athletics, Philadelphia winning four runs to three.

With only five hits Boston chalked up eight runs to beat Chicago, whose players hit eight times.

The scores of both leagues yesterday were:

National League
Cincinnati 3, New York 1.
Chicago 4, Boston 2.

American League
New York 2, Cleveland 3.
Philadelphia 4, Detroit 3.
Boston 8, Chicago 2.
Washington 2, St. Louis 14.

When the fishermen's races are held off Gloucester, Mass., Aug. 31 and Sept. 2, it is very likely that Captain Martin L. (Marty) Welch, most famous of Gloucester fishermen racing skippers, will be seen at the helm of one of the vessels. The schooner Progress, owned by the United Fisheries Company, and reported to be one of the fastest of the present fleet in this section, has been entered for the races. Marian J. Cooney, who filed the entry, declared that unless some unforeseen development prevented, Captain Welch would be at her wheel when the gun booms for the start. Captain Welch brought fame to the international races between Gloucester and Nova Scotia and retired when the old Elsie was beaten by the modern Bluenose at Halifax in 1921. The entry of the Progress brings the starting list to four. The others are the schooner Elsie, to be sailed by Capt. Norman Ross; schooner Thomas S. Gorton, Captain Wallace Parsons, and the Mary, Captain Ben Pine.

From the babble of voices that attend any cricket match in Boston vicinity may often be heard words to the effect that "Cricketers may come and cricketers may go, but they go on forever." They are George "Pop" Nichols and his one time playmate, John F. Dixon. Nichols plays with the Mystic Lodge team, and Dixon sports the emblems of the Everett team. These two have been out front in the cricket game around Boston for years and years. Nobody seems to know just how long they have been on the job, but George Nichols will be 70 his next birthday which leaves the world to figure it out. And judging from the vigor of his play he has many years to go. He can still bowl them up in a very "easy" manner, with no apparent effort on his part. All that Nichols is, so is Dixon, except that in addition to his part as a player, Dixon performs the duties of president of the Bay State League.

FOOTBALL POSTPONED

Because of inclement weather, last night's league football fixture between the Empress Social Club and Regiment was postponed. If necessary, it will be played in the fall at the conclusion of other intervening competitions.

SOFTBALL POSTPONED

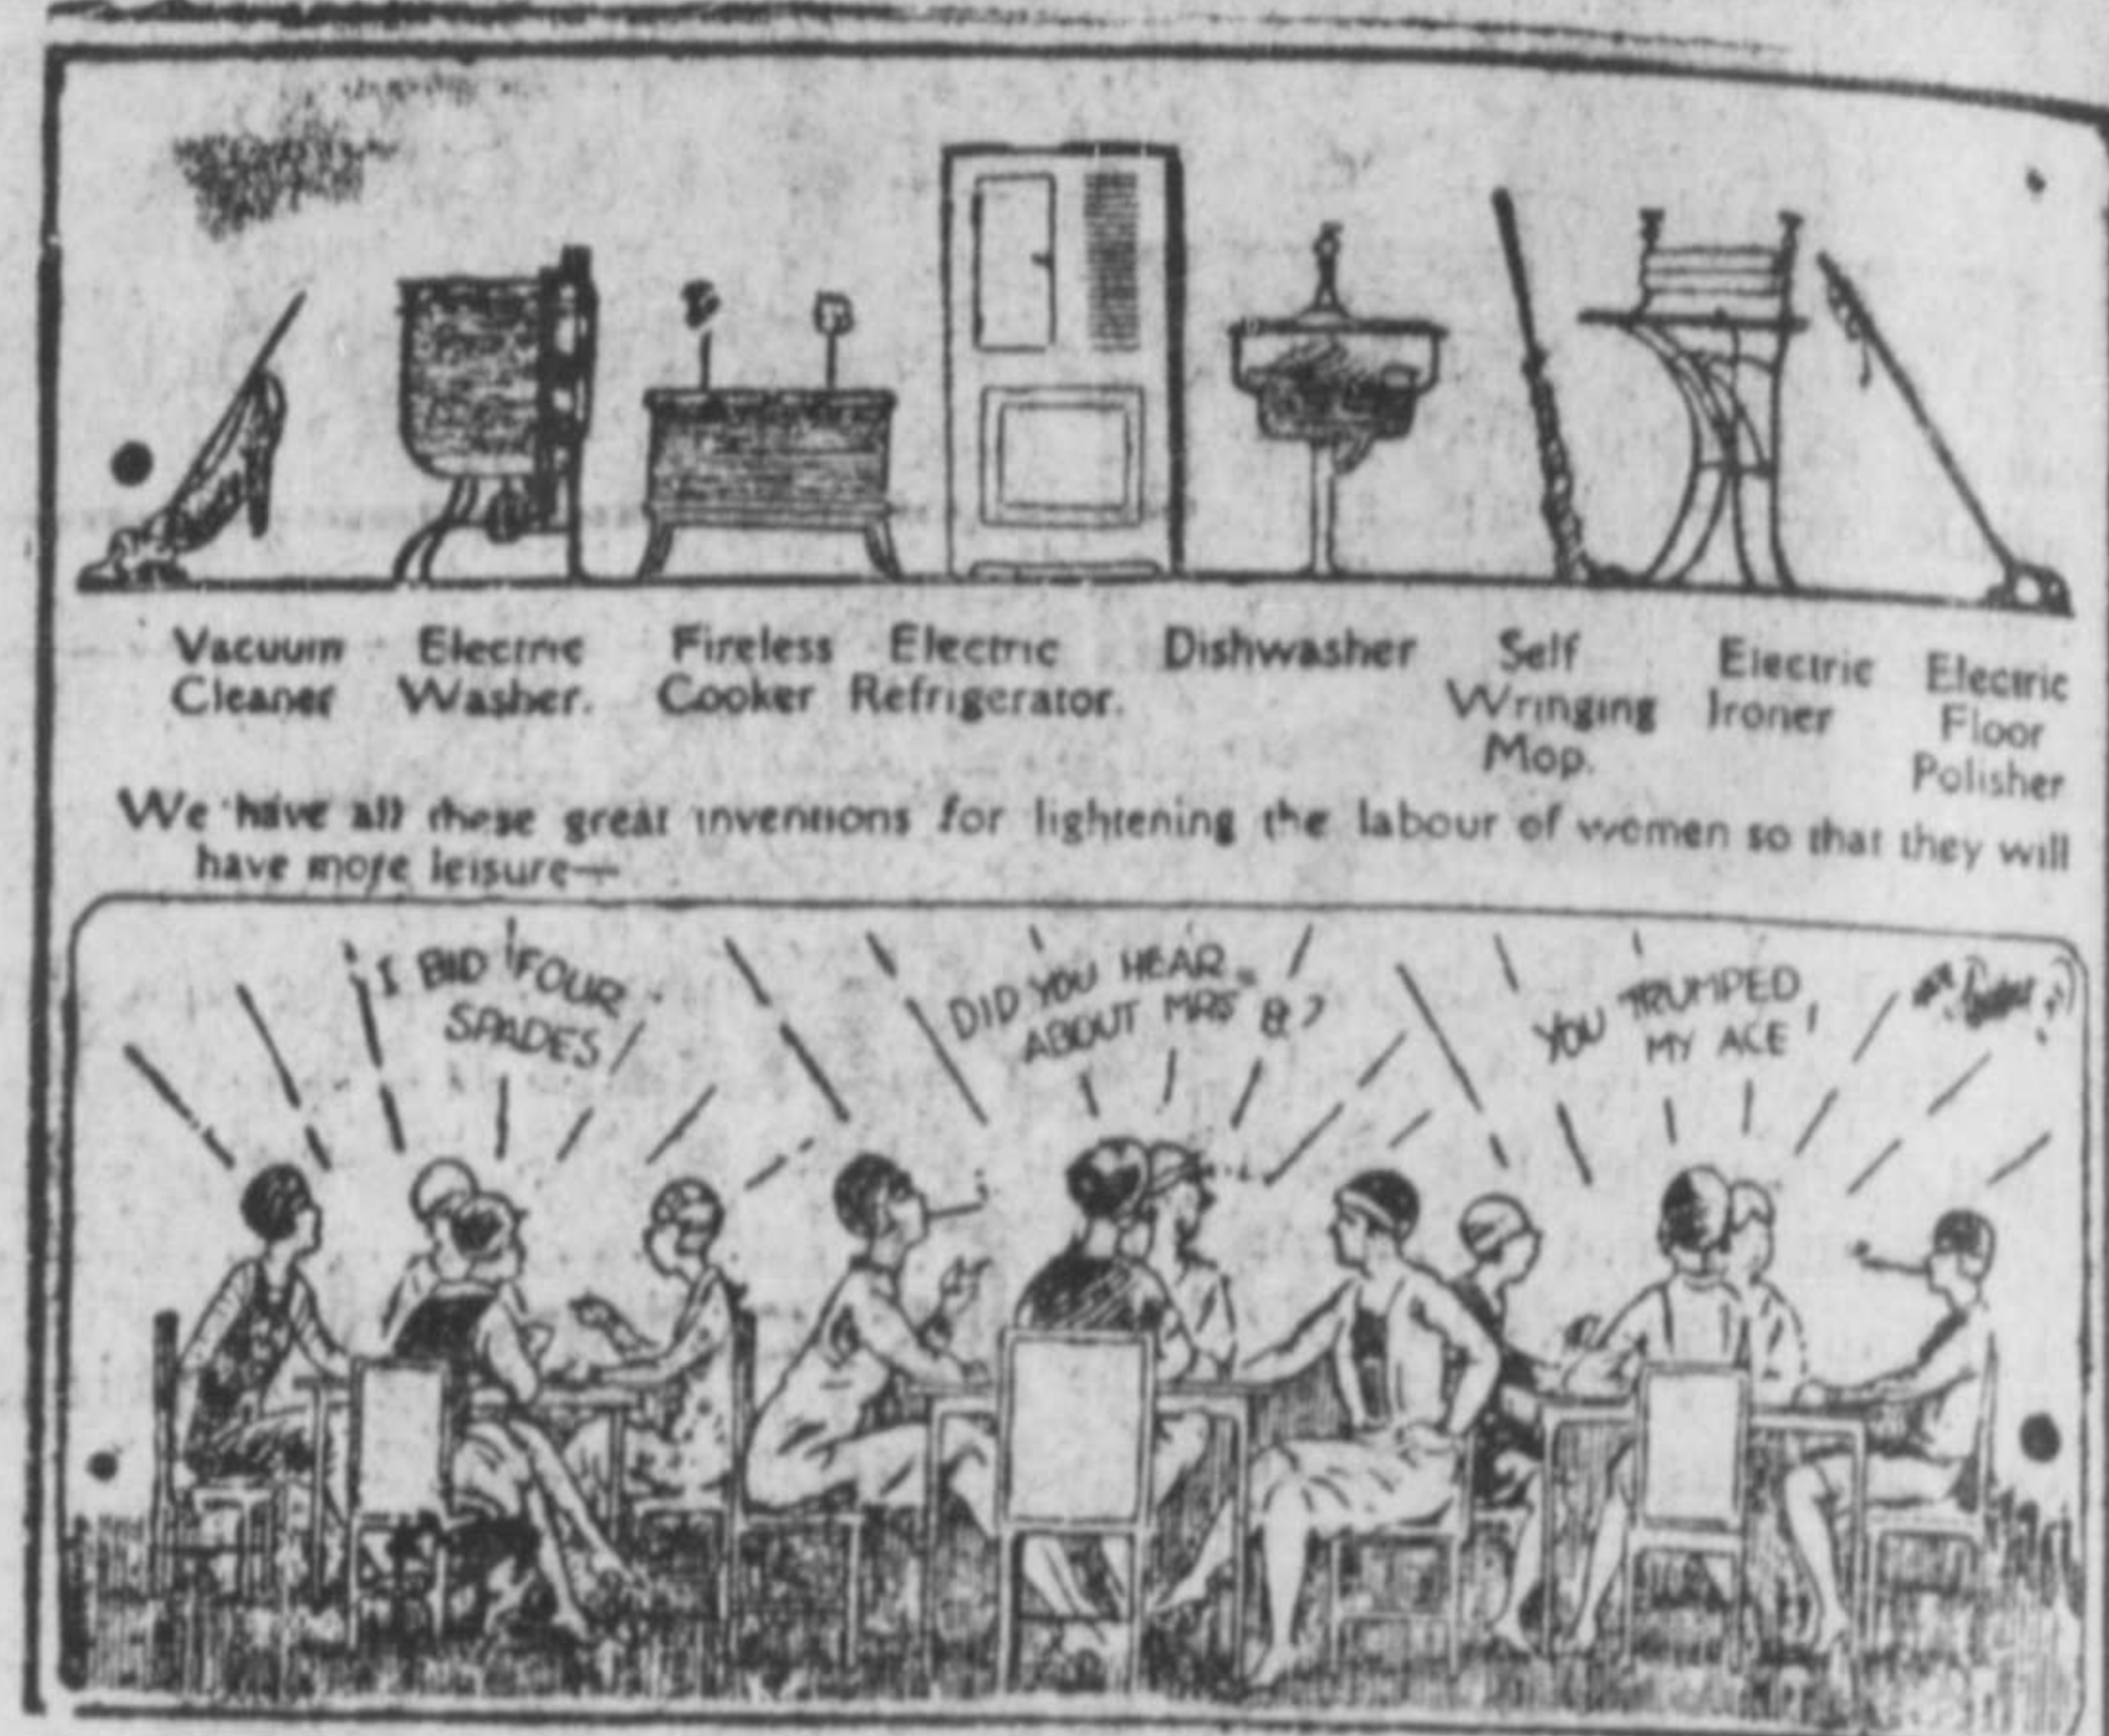

On account of the rain, last night's C.N.R. Softball League fixture between Station and Dry, Doek had to be put off and will be played this evening, weather permitting.

DELICIOUS DAINTY, containing an astonishing amount of nourishment is Quaker Puffed Rice. Tempting morsels that no appetite can resist, yet full of food elements in a form for easy digestion.

Quaker Puffed Rice is the rice grain thoroughly cooked and steam exploded to eight times normal size. The millions of tiny food cells in each grain are broken down, thus releasing for easy assimilation all the energy of fine white rice. The puffing gives the grains a crunchy, toasted texture with the flavour of nut meats. It tempts the appetite and satisfies it, too.

Both children and grown-ups relish Quaker Puffed Rice. When other foods fail to entice, it stirs up lagging appetites. Serve at any meal or between meals, direct from the package or warmed. Use milk or cream, or fruit, jelly or jam. You will have delicious variety from ordinary foods.

Man in the Moon

The following polite note has been received from a subscriber who evidently expected that this column would try to heap ridicule on the visiting politicians this week.

"Yesterday I expected to see something in your column about our millionaire friends who were here Monday. I fear you must have been like a great many others, carried away by the glitter of their gold. If not perhaps you will publish the following verses:

Three orators went into the west, but into the west went they, and at Prince Rupert they stopped off For just a night and day.

Three millionaires these orators were, Cash oozed at every pore, and up the tariffs they would raise, To make their millions more.

Bennett took for his text a dollar bill, And preached a sermon fine, It fairly dripped with money talk in almost every line.

These poor, mad multi-millionaires, Who came here just to tease us, Came northward in palatial yacht Well known to all as Creosus.

And now that they have told their tale, The easy marks to fool, They've gone back east to try to find Another crop of wool.

against 45.11 inches in the first six months of 1928.

CHANEY APPEARS IN STRANGE ROLE

Dramatic Heights Reached by Star
in Drama of Many Thrills

The strange illusions of a magician of the stage, and the even stranger illusions of voodoo priests and devil worshippers in the jungles of Africa are among the mysteries in Lon Chaney's latest Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer thriller, "West of Zanzibar," which is being shown tonight at the Capitol Theatre.

As "Dead Legs Flint" Chaney first appears in the picture as a stage magician, performing theatre illusions and then, paralyzed in a fight with an enemy, is next seen in the African jungles ruling a tribe of savages by his strange "magic" as a "white voodoo" priest. All the time he trails the man who injured him, and formulates a terrible plot of revenge.

Lionel Barrymore plays the fugitive enemy and Mary Nolan, heroine of "Sorrel and Son," is seen as Chaney's daughter, a dominant figure in this uncanny structure of terrorism and revenge. Warner Baxter, Jane Daly and others of note appear in the cast.

their camp at Lakelse Lake on Monday. They plan on a two weeks' outing and are under the supervision of Rev. T. H. Allan of United Church.

Rev. T. H. Wright was a visitor attend the United Church Presbytery.

Dr. Purdy and Dr. Simmons, well known Vancouver dentists, are visitors in Hazelton for a week.

Rupert is visiting here with Miss Jane York.

Douglas Lay, resident mining engineer, returned last week from a trip to Usk where he inspected the Columario and Sealy properties both of which are working.
He has now left for the Babines to spend a few days.

R. E. Allen, district forester, was a visitor here from Prince Rupert last week, being accompanied by his daughters, Misses Alice and Teddy Allen.

BURNS LAKE

Clyde Smith is engaged in carrying out considerable improvements to the Burns Lake garage, including painting.

A. R. Brown left last week for Grassy Plains to carry out some carpentry work.

Locke Quey, managing proprietor of the Omineca Cafe here, left last week for an extended visit to his home in Canton, China. He will sail this week from Vancouver on the Empress of France.

A party of local girls comprising Misses Gertrude Wahman, Aralene Smith, Zella Smith, Iona
Smith, Irene Smith and Olive Nourse are encamped at the portage near the canal on Burns Lake.

tion Co. Coming back he brought

VANDERHOOF
Robie L. Reid of Vancouver, Grand Master of the Masonic Lodge of British Columbia, paid an official visit to Nechako Lodge here last Wednesday evening.
Past Grand Master A. M. Manson was also in attendance.

Improvements to both the United and Anglican Churches here have been carried out by Frank Bowman.

The hay crop in the Nechako district this year is exceptionally light owing to prolonged dry weather earlier in the season but grain crops, however, are looking very good and, providing there are several weeks of hot weather, should fill out well. All crops are at least two weeks later than usual this season.

As a result of his collision with a public works department car, driven by Robert Reid, Antoine James, an Indian, was fined $10
by Stipendiary Magistrate J. D.
Charleson for driving to the common danger. He also made good for the damage done, amounting to $85.
