B. C. FAVORED IN HEALTH

Beats Whole of Canada in Saving the Babies and Is Second in Marrying, but Births Low. OTTAWA, Aug. 23.—While the birth rate in British Columbia is low, infant mortality is also low, as shown by figures issued by the Dominion bureau of statistics just issued.

The total number of births last year in British Columbia was 10,312, just a little lower than Nova Scotia and slightly higher than New Brunswick. The rate of births per thousand of population is 17.7, the lowest without exception in the whole Dominion.

When it comes to saving the babies, however, British Columbia is all there. The deaths under one year numbered only 521, a notable decrease over the previous year, the lowest in Canada except Prince Edward Island. When it comes to the rate per thousand, British Columbia has them all beaten because her rate is 50.5 and Prince Edward Island, which comes next, is 50.9. All other provinces are higher.

British Columbia has more deaths to the thousand of population than either of the prairie provinces, accounted for by the fact that the aged and sick often move to the coast. In spite of this British Columbia's death rate is only 10.1 to the thousand, smaller than any of the eastern provinces, including Ontario.

British Columbia is also a marrying province. The marriage rate per thousand population last year was 8.5, being exceeded only by Alberta, which had 9.1. Prince Edward Island had only 5.4 and the much vaunted Quebec only 7.2.

DISAPPOINTMENT

One of the subjects still being discussed by debating societies is whether realization is better than anticipation. If people had to depend upon realization for their enjoyment it would often not come, whereas they get much pleasure from anticipation.

A small case in point has happened recently in Prince Rupert. Throughout the city residents have been tending their gardens and looking forward to August when the whole garden would be a mass of bloom. Carefully they nursed the young plants, warded off enemies and brought the gardens to a point where they expected great results. Then came the storm of this week, a killing storm, so far as many of the flowers are concerned, and their garden is a wreck. True, everything is not gone and if there is fine weather soon there will be some results, but the realization will nothing like equal the anticipation. It is in a small way something like the prairie crop.

How can it be expected that people will behave well when the weather is so mean.

THE NATIVE QUESTION

The letter from the Naas River natives in regard to fishing privileges on the Naas River raises the whole question of the status of the Indians on this coast. Everyone agrees that they must be given every consideration because they were the original occupiers of the country even if they did not utilize it to any extent. The federal government looks after their interests and sees that they are not imposed upon.

While the natives at one time enjoyed undisputed sway in this country, they were not a unit and members of different tribes fought whenever they met. The conditions of life were anything but pleasant. Today the life of the native is changed. He no longer depends for a living wholly on fishing and hunting as he did in the old days. He has entered many occupations and takes his place in the labor market with the rest of the people. There has been a total change in his status and with it a change in his viewpoint. He is a different man. Very soon he will probably abandon the reserve altogether and become a full-fledged citizen, equal in every respect to any other.

In the meantime, however, until that full status of citizenship is attained, the native has a special claim on the protection of the government. His interests must be looked after.

Then, looked at from another point of view the native also has a duty to perform. He must be efficient and see that he gives good service to the country to which he owes his present status. It is often stated that the Indian will not stick to any work and is therefore not a desirable employee. That seems to be right in many cases, but in others it is not.

To the natives, possibly, the advice of Booker Washington to the negroes of Tuskegee might also apply. He told them if they wished to be respected they must learn to work efficiently and they should also be careful to own their own farms, furnish their houses, make themselves useful to their neighbors and necessary to the country. This has been largely followed out here by the natives, but even more might be done.

FISH TRAP INCONGRUITIES

Editor, Daily News:—
I hold under my hand a copy of your esteemed paper dated August 2, and feel impressed by the incongruity of two major news items, published therein.

Though any comment of mine, may be a little tardy, yet I feel that the attention of the general public should be directed thereto.

One of the items of news referred to is an interesting report by the chief supervisor of fisheries, Major Motherwell. It is well to remember that this is no hearsay but accumulated data gathered by the department and are the positive statements of a responsible official, Major Motherwell. In this report, he refers to the Naas Area as follows, confirming all fishermen's arguments at the trap inquiry by saying:

"The situation on the Naas is very similar to that on the Fraser River, where salmon, swimming to the Canadian streams, first pass through the American waters. Tagging experiments have shown that salmon tagged as far as 400 miles north of the British Columbia boundary have been heading for the Naas and Skeena and water, even farther south. It will be appreciated that unless our neighbors to the north of the Alaskan boundary are prepared to curtail their fishing operations, little headway can be made for conservation in the Naas, particularly in view of the fact that salmon running to that area run the gamut of hundreds of Alaskan traps and setries before reaching the Naas River."

I repeat this statement of the gallant Major, verbatim, because it is so vital to the local fishing industry. The other item of news referred to, is one of the resolutions passed by that august body, representative of Canada from Atlantic to the Pacific, which requests the government to permit trap fishing at once, in accord with Judge Elliot's finding so that they (the traps) may be in operation for 1930.

Personally, I admire their tenacity in making this request to a government whose competent officials make the statement that the traps are a menace both to the Naas and Skeena.

How can a government, grant this request in the face of its own official report?

To do so would be pandering purely and simply to the monied interests, and ignoring the path of duty.

Fishermen are taking notice of the local men, active in the Fisheries Association, and while we delight in seeing local men honored, yet we regret to see their names coupled with such requests which must eventually cause the depletion of the escapement of salmon to the Naas and Skeena, the corner stones of the city of Prince Rupert.

MUSCLE SHOALS WILL BE ISSUE

Vexing Power Problem Will Be Dealt With at First Hoover Session

WASHINGTON, D. C., Aug. 23.—Looking ahead to the first regular congressional session of the Hoover administration, beginning in December, congressional leaders see the old Muscle Shoals power plant disposition question as one of the sure problems for those days.

This issue promises to bring before President Hoover the vexing power problem, involving government ownership or private operation. Senator Norris, Republican of Nebraska, champion of public ownership, and Senator Sackett, Republican of Kentucky, an advocate of private operation of this particular piece of property, probably will lead the contest in the senate.

The dispute over disposition of the giant power plant in Alabama, established in the wardays, has raged in congress since the close of the world war and has rivaled the farm relief issue in attention.

After years of quarreling, Senator Norris finally won out in congress a year ago, but his resolution providing for government operation failed to get the approval of Calvin Coolidge.

Mr. Coolidge did not sign the Norris resolution and applied what is commonly known as the "pocket veto." Senator Norris contested the authority of a pocket veto, but the supreme court upheld the veto. So, during the present extra session the Nebraskaan started his resolution on its way through congress again.

The senate agriculture committee has reported the Norris resolution again to the senate and it is on the calendar there awaiting disposition of the pending tariff bill. It probably won't get consideration before the regular session beginning in December.

Meanwhile, Senator Sackett is working away on an opposition program. He would have the gigantic water power plant led by the government to the highest bidder. He says he knows there are plenty willing to bid.

Henry Ford was once a bidder and in the days when his proposition was under consideration by congress the Muscle Shoals dispute was hottest. But Mr. Ford got tired of waiting for congress and withdrew his offer.

BIBLE QUESTION IN EDMONTON SCHOOLS IS BEING DISCUSSED

EDMONTON, Aug. 23.—As a result of opposition expressed by a large number of Edmonton citizens to the proposal to read selected passages from the Bible in the public school of the city, the school board will be asked to rescind the motion authorizing this and passed, after lengthy debate, in the said schools.

months ago
The new motion, sponsored by Trustee F. C. Casselman, reads as follows:
"That in view of the fact that a very considerable number of the citizens of Edmonton are opposed to and disapprove of the principle of compulsory reading of selected Bible passages in the public schools of this city, this board do hereby rescind the motion of the 1928 board with reference to the said compulsory Bible reading and passed, after lengthy debate, in the said schools."

THE GREEN SHADOW

by HERMAN LANDON

INSTALLMENT XXVIII.

He got up from the chair, swayed a little, stroked his brow as if suffering from a slight headache, and looked out over the room. Still there was no caballero in sight. The room was becoming insufferably hot and stuffy. Unsteadily he made his way through the eddying crowd. In the hall outside he removed his mask while he wiped the moisture from his forehead, then replaced it again.

Now he moved to the window at the farther end and drew the fresh air into his lungs. Leaning out only slightly, so that his head barely showed beyond the window frame, he looked down into the black cavern below, then to the side. On a balcony about 20 feet away he descried two dim figures. A scarcely audible word was brought to him by a slight puff of wind:

"Satisfied?"

It was Joan of Arc speaking, of course. From the one little word he could make a fairly accurate guess as to the trend of the conversation on the balcony. He tried to hear more, but the rest was indistinguishable. Again he scanned the black depth below, then left the window and, disdainful the elevators sought the stairs. It would take shape. Back and forth his eyes roved, searching every foot of space and presently they fastened on a point near the stack of packing cases. A blur, scarcely distinguishable from its background, riveted his attention. It was a formless thing at first, only a slight shade blacker than the darkness which framed it.

"Protective coloring!" he mused.

His eyes began to ache from the intense strain. Little by little the blurry thing began to differentiate itself from its surroundings. A shape stood out vaguely from the shadowy masses. He gave a surprised start. Then, leaning a little lower over the sill, he formed a tube with his hands and whistled softly. Something stirred in response. A pair of eyes seemed to be peering upward.

"A dog!" Dale thought. "My hat off to you, Dr. Moffett. You have trained him for this job, of course—rehearsed him very likely. Great idea."

Dale grew thoughtful. He could admire the cleverness of an adversary, even a despicable one like Dr. Moffett. He saw the plan clearly now. When the parcel dropped from the balcony the dog would clutch it in his jaws, and, by a prearranged route, slink off to a waiting car and a waiting master somewhere in the neighborhood. There were hundreds of cars parked in the vicinity of the Vandermoore tenement. Nobody would suspect a dog of mischief. If seen in the act, he would merely excite admiration for his cleverness.

Suddenly Dale jerked up his head. A slight screeching sound like that of a window being cautiously raised, had reached his ears. He glanced upward along the wall, most of it dark, but with here and there an isolated light. From a dark window a little to the side and a few floors higher up a head protruded. A dim light fell on it from the window just above, and Dale could see it was a man's head. The man was looking upward, toward the row of balconies at the top, perhaps at the very balcony where Miss Castle and Joan of Arc were.

Dale nodded. In addition to the dog there would be a watcher, of course, waiting to see if there should be a hitch in the proceedings. As well as he could in the dim light, Dale studied the shape of the head and the long blond wig which framed it. Evidently the watcher was one of the merrymakers. And Dale thought he had seen that blond head before.

On the Trail of the Caballero

The head turned. For an instant Dale caught a vague glimpse of a face, and then the head disappeared within the window.

"The caballero—Paul Ainsworth!" he mumbled. He was still gazing rigidly at the window from which the wigged head had projected. One, two, three. It was three floors above his own level. That would be the thirteenth floor, just midway between the ground and the roof. The window was the fifth from the central hall in a horizontal direction.

With the locality clearly fixed in his mind, he went to the stairs, ran up three flights, and turned into the transverse corridor at the left. He counted the doors as he passed them, and the metal figures on the upper panel told him it was No. 1325.

He waited a moment. There was no sign of life in the hall. The orchestral din on the top floor was scarcely audible here. After a moment's hesitation he turned the knob gently. The door must have been left unlocked in preparation for a quick retreat if necessary, for it swung easily inward. He held it open a bit and listened, but no sounds came from the interior. He touched his hair, his mask, his purple-trimmed robe, and without a sound stepped inside.

Silently he moved forward, approaching the window, only a gray blur in the darkness encompassed by the four walls. Only a few steps he moved, across a rug that deadened the sound of his footsteps, then stopped. In the gloom he could hear some one breathing, and he traced the sound to a point near the window. He waited a little, not quite certain how to proceed, and presently his eyes turned in another direction. Again he heard a subdued intake of breath.

There were two watchers in the room. Holding his own breath he moved back a few steps. There was a sound of movement in the front of the room. A man's head and shoulders were silhouetted against the window. For a moment the man leaned out and glanced upward.

"Annie is taking her time," a voice mumbled. Dale recognized the voice in an instant. The speaker was Paul Ainsworth. The Annie referred to could be none other than Joan of Arc.

"Annie is wise," another voice remarked. It was low and distinct, and it sounded vaguely familiar to Dale, yet he could not identify it. She knows we're playing this game to the tune of one hundred thousand berries. It pays to go slow and move carefully. Anyhow, there's no hurry. This party will last till daylight.

Ainsworth mumbled something under his breath. Dale was searching his memory for a clue to the other speaker's identity. He was certain he had heard the voice somewhere before.

"One hundred thousand," the same voice wailed on, still raised W QRP off voice went on. "It's a nice little grubstake. Too bad it's got to be split five ways."

"Five ways," Dale thought. That meant there were five in the blackmailing band. He tried to check them off by name. Dr. Moffett, Miss Paul Ainsworth, Annie, Axelson. Miss Conway was not to be counted, for she was dead. Who were the other two? The answer eluded him, but by way of compensation the other speaker's name suddenly flashed through his mind. Axelson, of course!

Again a shadow appeared at the window. Ainsworth was looking up at the balcony.

"Wish she would hurry," he mumbled peevishly, moving away from the window again. "Can't imagine what's delaying her."

"Miss Castle probably wants to look the papers over," Axelson suggested. "A lot of good it will do her! If I say it myself, I did a good job copying these papers. Even if she knows Forrester's handwriting—and I'll bet she doesn't—she won't be able to tell them from the originals."

Dale started a little. So the papers were merely copies! Well, he had suspected something of the sort. The originals, of course, were to be retained by Dr. Moffett and used by him for the purpose of further extortion.

"Oh, don't crow," said Ainsworth with his usual surliness. "I'll admit you are clever at that sort of thing, but don't forget that a lot of clever fergers are wasting their talents behind prison bars."

"So are a lot of clever blackmailers," Axelson retorted.

A pause fell. Dale was getting a deeper and more comprehensive insight into Ainsworth's despicable character. There seemed to be no limits to the man's villainy. Even while his heart ached for Miss Castle such an exhibition of treachery and infamy filled him with loathing.

"Are you sure Miss Castle came here alone?" Ainsworth asked in an undertone.

"Positive. Not worrying?"

"I'm just wondering if she is quite so simple as she looks. I think she would be capable of playing a trick on us."

"What can she do? We've taken precautions against every sort of surprise she can possibly spring on us, haven't we? I don't see where there's any room for trickery. Annie won't even touch the money. Miss Castle will just drop it over the railing, and Caesar will do the rest."

"Caesar," Dale thought. That was the dog, of course.

Another pause came, then Ainsworth asked: "Did you see the man in the white toga with the purple border?"

"Oh, you mean the cockeyed one?"

"I'm not so sure he was a cockeyed as he looked. He danced with Miss Castle, and afterward he took her out on the balcony. I don't like the way he acted."

"She had to dance with somebody, didn't she? And it's the most natural thing in the world to step out for a bit of fresh air after a dance."

Dale smiled. It was a lucky thing he had selected a mask that concealed more of his features than the ordinary mask did. His muscles were beginning to feel the strain of remaining motionless for so long. He moved a foot cautiously.

"It's all right," Axelson was saying. "You're just nervous tonight. Everything is going all right. We'll trim Castle good and hard, and then we go after Ferryman, eh? Ferryman is rich. Not so rich as Castle, but he's got a lot of coin salted away. And he owes me something for the way he gave me the air. I'd like to—"

He stopped and caught his breath sharply. Dale's foot, as he moved, had struck against something.

"Sav. did you hear that?" Axelson exclaimed in a hoarse whisper.

"Yes," Ainsworth whispered back.

Dale sensed two pairs of eyes and ears straining in his direction. He moved back and ran his hand along the wall until he found the light switch. A little click sounded, but no lights came on. The bulbs had either been removed from the sockets or partly unscrewed to forestall the very thing he had attempted to do.

"It's a plant!" Axelson cried hoarsely. "We've got to stop it! Quick—the signal!"

A match flared up. Then came a sizzling sound like that of a frying pan over a fire. A small streak of flame shot up over the window sill. Then two pairs of feet scurried quickly across the floor. The door slammed.

With a soft chuckle Dale stepped forward and fumbled for the light fixture. As he had suspected, the bulb had been partly unscrewed to break the connection. He gave it a few twists and a bright light came on. He saw a spacious room, an open traveling bag on the floor, a few toilet articles on the dressing table.

He acted in great haste now, as if each second were precious. He took two newspapers, saturated them with ink from a bottle on the writing desk, formed them into a small, compact bundle, tied a string around it, and held it at arm's length. A small, steady trickle of ink fell from the package.

Smiling, he stepped to the window. He looked down for a moment, then let the ink-dripping package drop to the ground.

"Caesar will do the rest," he chuckled softly as he ran quickly from the room.

CHICAGO CUBS GOING STRONG

Lead of Nine and a Half Games Over Pittsburgh Pirates Should Be Enough Now

NEW YORK, Aug. 23.—The Chicago Cubs outlugged the Phillies, gathering sixteen runs, but gained no ground over the Pittsburgh Pirates, who also won.

The lead of the Cubs is now nine and a half games, which should be safe enough.

Jimmy Wilson's homer in the fourth with one on was the margin of victory when St. Louis Cardinals beat the Boston Braves.

Brooklyn scored nine runs in the third inning, getting thirteen altogether.

American League

In the American League, St. Louis B. own raked three New York Yankee pitchers to win with fifteen hits against seven scattered wallops which failed to score a single run for New York.

Mose Grove lost his fourth game of the season by one run.

There were three White Sox errors in one inning when Chicago met Philadelphia.

a Purveyor of Health

DR. DANIEL R. HODGEN, an eminent physician, says that Beer is a valuable Food for Health. Strength and Vitality; because it is easily digested and assimilated. It nourishes and invigorates the system.

The use of Beer is to be encouraged, not only as an aid to digestion, because it tends to increase the flow of digestive fluids and because of its highly nourishing reaction without any deleterious effects upon the human system.

The undermentioned Beers are properly prepared. They are guaranteed to be absolutely pure. To safeguard the public they are constantly tested by Analytical Chemists employed by the B. C. Liquor Control Board.

EXTRACTS FROM VICKERS' DIARY ~ 1752

DIARY
WED - NOV. 4th 1752

"Tarrying awhile at Southampton Brother John did find occasion to exchange scholarly compliments in French, with a liquor merchant of Le Havre. This worthy man did blend with our Vickers' Gin a cordial named vermouth; which did make a most palatable appetizer. Guests in the Coffee Room of the Mariners Inn pronounced the mixture a rare treat."

(Since that far day, people the world over have approved the mixture of Vickers' Gin, with Vermouth and Bitters... the perfect ingredients of a Martini Cocktail.)

DECLARES OLD METHOD OF TRAVELLING SLOW

W. J. Crawford, the well known transfer and cartage man of Stewart, who returned this morning after a brief visit to the city, is so enthused over the prospects of the flying game that he declares they will soon have a regular air taxi service in Stewart.

"The old methods are too slow for me," he declares.

EMPIRESS WINS SOCCER MATCH

Took Regiment Into Camp By Score of Two to One in League Fixture Last Evening

The football season reopened after the rain last night, when the Empress Soccer Club defeated the Regiment two to one in the league schedule for the Mabley Cup. The game was a well contested one but, owing to cold weather conditions, the attendance of fans was small.

There was no scoring in the first half but soon after the opening of the second, Regimental enthusiasm soared high when Norrington scored for the soldiers with a pretty shot. It was not long before Nick Chenoski equalized and then Marks gave the Empress Club what was to prove the winning goal.

William Barton was referee and Alex Clapperton and Sam Currie acted as linesmen.

The standing to date in the league competition is as follows:

	W	L	Pts
Thistles	2	0	4
Empress	2	1	4
Regiment	0	3	0

SUPT.'S OFFICE WON SOFTBALL

Still Has Chance to Play Off in Canadian National League

In a scheduled softball game last night, the Superintendent's Office turned the tables on the Drydock, by beating them 9 to 7 in an evenly divided contest. This win for the Superintendent's Office still keeps it in the running for the play-off in the second half. Jackson and Morrison played a very nice game for the Office, while Smith and Reid showed up best for the Drydock.

The teams were:
Office—Holroyd, Harold, Morrison, Jackson, Louton, Summers, Smith, White, Strachan.
Drydock—Gawthorne, Howe, Kelsey, Smith, McKeown, McFee, Reid, McKenzie.

The league standing for the second half of the season is as follows:

	W.	L.	Pct.
Station	5	2	.714
Drydock	3	3	.500
Supt.'s Office	3	4	.429
Round House	1	6	.143

Sport Chat

Native Sons of Canada, league leaders, with six wins and four losses and Gyro Club, tallenders, with five wins and six losses, are billed to meet this evening in the City Baseball League. It may be the last match before next week's Exhibition sporting activities and a good game is expected. A Gyro win at this time would create an even more close and interesting situation in the league standing and the service men are reputed to be out to put themselves in the running for league honors by taking advantage of this opportunity. On account of recent rain, it would appear necessary now to continue league baseball after Fair Week for a few games at least.

Rube Marquard, recently appointed manager of the Jacksonville, Fla. team, has been pitching professional baseball since he was 15 years old. His father, a Cleveland, O. contractor, objected to Rube's choice of the profession, so Rube left home, went to St. Paul, Minn., where he met the late John J. McGraw of the Giants, who paid $100,000 for the southpaw pitcher in 1908, and that was a record then.

THE VALUE OF UNIVERSITY TO A YOUNG MAN

Fred Kergin Gives Address To Rotary Club at Luncheon Yesterday

'What the University Offers to a Young Man' was the subject of a brief but very interesting address by Fred Kergin to the Rotary Club at the luncheon yesterday afternoon in the Commodore Cafe.

In the first place, Mr. Kergin said, the young man gets in touch with people from all over the country and instead of thinking in terms of the home town he thinks in terms of the whole country, which is an excellent thing.

The social side of university life, the speaker said, was of value. The young student meets strangers and thus learns how to meet people.

Turning to the field of athletics, Mr. Kergin showed how these might be of benefit. Physical examination showed whether the regular compulsory exercises could be taken and, if not, then corrective exercises were compulsory in their place.

On the cultural side was the opportunity at the university to hear the best music, see good plays and get in touch with the finest literature. All this contributed greatly to the education of the young man and as a result the university life was usually a happy one, often the happiest in a man's life.
