Rt. Hon. J. H. Thomas Urges the Purchasing Goods from Britain

MONTREAL, Aug. 21.—Canadians, according to Rt. Hon. J. H. Thomas, lord privy seal and minister of unemployment in the British cabinet, might derive considerable satisfaction from the knowledge that they will be making a substantial contribution to the alleviation of suffering and misery among Great Britain's unemployed by purchasing a larger proportion of their requirements from that country.

"We buy fifty per cent of your wheat," declared Mr. Thomas, in an interview, "and it is not given to us either. On the other hand, you are buying three times as much from United States in raw and manufactured products as you purchase from us. If our people's spending power could be increased, it would mean much toward the solution of our greatest problem."

Questioned as to the chief topics discussed at Ottawa with members of the cabinet, Mr. Thomas replied that emigration, the proposed economic conference and better trade relations within the Empire were considered and he said that satisfactory progress had been made.

Fisherman Lost Life When His Boat Burned Off Digby Island Body Brought Here About Noon

K. Kennedy of Seal Cove, well known local fisherman, lost his life, presumably accidentally, last night from his trolling boat near the wireless station wharf, Digby Island. Identification of the body was established by means of papers which were found by the police in deceased's clothes. Later the body was identified by friends.

Yesterday afternoon a small boat was seen drifting in front of the wireless station. About 4:30 in the afternoon the lighthouse tender Birnie, Capt. Joe Peterson, came along and offered assistance, which the man on the boat declined to accept.

Last evening, possibly around 10:30 p.m., a burst of flame was seen by Charles Currie of John Currie & Son, contractors, close to the wireless wharf. He later went down the beach to investigate but found nothing, the fire having in the meantime disappeared.

This morning Currie went along the beach and found the dead body of a man and about 50 feet distant, the half submerged and evidently burned hull of a boat.

Currie immediately advised the police of his find and Provincial Constables Robert Gibson and Harold Raybone proceeded to investigate. They believe that

SETTLING LAND NORTH ALBERTA

EDMONTON, Aug. 21.—Nearly 300,000 acres of land, or about 400 square miles, have been settled on in the Edmonton land district since the beginning of the fiscal year of 1929-30, according to figures given out by the Dominion land office here.

By far the larger part of this land has never been cleared or settled on before, and the demand for it continues strong, large numbers of men besieging the land office every morning as soon as the doors open.

During the period from April 1 to August 15, inclusive, no less than 1,727 homesteads have been filed on, each of them the prescribed 160 acres, while approximately 60 soldier grants have also been taken out.

The filing this year has broken all records for the district, the last peak being in 1908, when railway lands were thrown open for preemption.

The rush this year started with April, when 349 homesteads were taken up. May saw this increased to 362, but June brought a falling-off when 308 quarters were filed on. July set a new mark with 482 homesteads preempted, while August bids fair to equal July, the first two weeks of the present month seeing 226 homesteads taken up. These figures are exclusive of soldier grants.

Mayor McMordie has received from Cardiff, South Wales, a large photograph of a new freighter which has just been launched there named by Sir William Reardon Smith & Sons "Prince Rupert City." Accompanying it was the following letter:

"As you are probably aware, we are building a number of new vessels, and as we are very interested in cargoes from the Pacific coast, and have now established a regular line from the coast, we are naming several of the new ships after cities and towns of the western states.

"We thought it might interest you to have a photograph of our S.S. "Prince Rupert City," recently launched, and enclose this herewith and hope to send you a further photograph, taken during her trial trip, or after she commences trading."

Britain, he declared, was steadily growing in wealth, power and education. There never was a time of such prosperity.

Naas River Natives Memorialize Department of Fisheries Regard to Depletion and Other Matters

The Niskga Indians, who live on the Naas River, have sent a memorial to the minister of marine and fisheries asking him to intervene on their behalf with the canners and to take other steps to protect the salmon in the Naas River, so that the means of livelihood of the natives on the river may not be taken away. They particularly object to the alleged preference given to Japanese, who, they claim, do not think of conservation and also send the money they earn out of the country. Following is the memorial:

Honorable Minister of Marine and Fisheries, Ottawa, Ont.:

On behalf of the Niskga Fishermen's Union, which union comprises all of the natives in the Naas River district, we beg to state as follows:

At the time the royal commission some years ago was in the Naas River, it was pointed out to them the difficulties that the natives were laboring under in the Naas River district, and particularly with regard to the treatment received by them in comparison to the treatment by the Japanese; and the natives were informed then that the number of Japanese licenses would gradually be reduced and that the matter would be taken up with the canneries in an endeavor to give the natives the first chance at employment and the first chance to obtain licenses.

A few years ago, for two or three years, the number of Japanese licenses were reduced but recently they have not been reduced at all.

Before the Japanese commenced fishing on the Naas River there were sufficient fish to more than supply the needs of the various canneries, but since the advent, particularly of the Japanese, the fish in the Naas River are gradually being depleted, largely on account of the intense fishing carried on by them.

It has been suggested from time to time that the Japanese are better fishermen than the natives, but this is not the case. The fact being that the natives are very efficient fishermen and understand fishing thoroughly, but as they appreciate the danger of the river being depleted, as a rule they fish only at high and low tide, whereas the Japanese fish continuously wherever the fish are running and do not give them an opportunity to go up to the streams to spawn.

Preference to Japanese
 Furthermore, we beg to state that owing to the fact that the Naas River is being depleted very

SURVEYING OF BEAR SUMMIT

C.P.R. Finding Out If Route Is Practicable For Railway Purposes

MONTREAL, Aug. 21.—A survey, under direction of C.P.R. officials, of a railroad route from the summit of Bear River Pass to the mouth of Bitter Creek, B.C., has been begun. This is the first step taken in exercising rights under the charter which was recently acquired by Consolidated Smelters from Vancouver Holdings Ltd.

This charter calls for construction of the Canadian North Eastern Railway from Stewart to Fort Graham, with a branch up the Finlay River to the Ferguson mine in the Ingenika section.

Though wide expansion is forecast for the railway in the future, the immediate object is to prepare it for serving the mines of the Bear River section, in which smelters is becoming largely interested.

The line was originally built in 1910 as far as the Red Cliff mine, a distance of about 14 miles, but to serve the George gold-copper, now owned by Smelters, it will have to be extended about six miles.

G. T. P. AGREEMENTS

The Board of Railway Commissioners gives a low rate on wheat to Quebec City which enables grain to be carried in competition with other routes. This rate is so low that the railways say they cannot operate under it economically. They asked the railway board to permit an appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada in regard to it, but this was refused. The railway board argues that the Canadian National is bound in the matter of rates by an agreement entered into by the now defunct Grand Trunk Pacific Railway.

Also we noticed that in Vancouver the C.N.R. was held by an old agreement in regard to the building of a hotel which is now becoming an accomplished fact.

Years ago the city of Prince Rupert entered into a written agreement with the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway whereby in return for certain taxation privileges the railway was to erect a handsome hotel in the city and to carry out a number of works in all of which they failed. The city carried out its part of the agreement, but the railway did not.

Now if the C.N.R. is being held to agreements entered into by the G.T.P., why not insist upon the Prince Rupert agreement being carried out? If the agreements are good in the east, they surely should be good in the west.

THE SOVIET AND INDIA
(Winnipeg Free Press)

The Soviet Government, it is said upon what appears to be good authority, will give no engagement to the British Labor Government to restrain the anti-British propaganda of the Third International, on the ground that it has no control over that organization. The Third International and the Soviet Government are the two sides of the same thing—the Communist party of Russia. The Third International is the external propagandist agency of Communism, and it need not be expected, so it is declared, that it will give up its aspiration to make the world Communist. Its method is to suggest, to further, and if opportunity offers, to finance revolutions in the countries with which, upon the diplomatic side, it maintains what are presumably friendly relations. Sir Austen Chamberlain recently read to the British House of Commons quotations from the text of a Communist manifesto issued last March and published at the time in Pravda.

The Manifesto

This manifesto began:
"For the support of the revolutionary movement in India.
"Militant support of a revolution in India will strengthen the world anti-imperialistic front.
"To the proletarians of all countries; to the oppressed peoples of the world.
"Proclamation of the Executive Committee of the Communist International."
The last page read:
"Peasants of India! In reply to the plans of your deadly enemies to violate and smash the proletariat, get ready for struggle. To battle against landlords and usurers, for the confiscation of land. Hasten to the line of fire! Organize, extend, and strengthen the militant Labor-Peasant Bloc against Imperialism. Your strength is in a union with the working class."
"To all toilers and the exploited in India! Only by means of decisive struggle with bourgeois treachery, only after having disclosed and thrown out the reformist lackeys, and only under the leadership of the revolutionary proletariat, will the revolution in India gain a victory."
"Down with British Imperialism, the robber and oppressor of India!"
"Down with the Swarajists and other bourgeois parties, the traitors of the national revolution in India!"
"Down with the English and Indian reformist lackeys, the agents of Imperialism!"
"Long live the revolutionary struggle of the workers and peasants in India!"
"Long live independent and freed India!"
"Long live the Soviet Republic of India!"

Britain's Position

These are the sentiments of the Russian Communist party, of the Third International, and, of necessity, of the Soviet Government which has no existence apart from the two other organizations. Yet this government not only desires to establish diplomatic relations with Great Britain, but has intimated that it will renew its request of 1924 that the British Government guarantee a large loan which it hopes to float on the British market. Given diplomatic relations the diplomatic and consular agents of the Soviet Government are bound as members of the Communist party to be in sympathy with the aims of the Third International: and upon occasion they will act as its agents. The Russian trade agent to Canada, with his 15 boxes filled with incendiary literature, is the true type of the Russian official of today.

It is easy to understand the hesitancy of the Macdonald Government to reestablish official and open centres of Communist influence in Great Britain. If it sticks to its position that it must be given assurances that influences identical with the Soviet Government shall cease to make war on the integrity of British institutions, it will carry with it, we should think, the approval of a great majority of the people of Great Britain. Canada, too, may very rightly ask for similar guarantees. If the Soviet Government refuses to give them, how can it have the hardihood to exploit the refusal to resume relations as a grievance against the governments of the British countries? The probabilities are, we should think, that if the British Government sticks to its position the guarantees will be given. But will they be kept? Ah, that is another story!

NAAS RIVER NATIVES MEMORIALIZE DEPARTMENT OF FISHERIES REGARD TO DEPLETION AND OTHER MATTERS.

seriously by Japanese with gas boats that they should not be allowed to use them in fishing on the river, as in the past, as this makes fishing all the more intensive, and it will not be long before the natives will be unable to earn a living there at all. At the present time, owing to the preference given to the Japanese fishermen over the natives at the canneries, the natives have been unable to catch sufficient fish to keep themselves and their families in the necessities of life. The Japanese are being given the preference by the canneries with regard to licenses, with regard to supplying of nets and are employed on the cannery tenders. The Japanese usually have first choice, and it is very difficult for the natives to obtain licenses or nets from the canneries on this account; and on the cannery tenders the Japanese are usually employed and give preference to their own countrymen in towing boats out to fish, with regard to areas, in the taking of fish from the boats to the canneries and in towing the boats in.

In fishing at high and low tides, we do this having regard to the matter of conservation. To the Japanese it appears the question of conservation is of no importance whatsoever.

The government in the past promised to take this matter up in order to obtain a preference for the natives who have lived and fished in that district long even before the white men started fishing there.

We also wish to point out to you that we suggested to the commission that sockeye fishing should not be allowed to commence in the Naas River district until after July first. At the present time the canneries commence their operations on June 20th, and it is a well known fact that as a rule the first run of fish go up the river between the 20th of June and the 1st of July. This run is considered the best run from the standpoint of spawning, and this run, owing to the intensive fishing, is usually for the most part caught, with the result that if this continues in a short time the Naas River will be depleted. On the other hand, if sockeye fishing is not allowed to commence until after the 1st of July this first run invariably will be allowed to get up stream to spawn and thus, to a very great extent, protect fishing indefinitely on this river.

Boundary For Fishing

We also wish to point out to you that the boundary line in connection with sockeye fishing was moved down this year until it is near the canneries and prevents the natives from fishing up the river, as in the past, thereby depriving them of a chance to earn sufficient for the needs of themselves and their families.

We also wish to point out the boundary for fishing coho was moved down, and we ask you to restore the original boundary line for the fishing of these salmon, as the present boundary line makes it practically impossible for us to catch them excepting on sand bars, as they cannot be caught in deep waters. This seriously prevents us from catching any number of cohoes.

In connection with the fishing of spring salmon, we wish to point out that the Japanese have been given the preference, and it is practically impossible for us to get nets to fish after the usual allotment has been made the Japanese, and in considering the fact that we are natives and have lived in that district long before the white men or Japanese came there, we should at least receive fair play, if not, a preference. We would ask you to take this matter up with the canneries on our behalf to see if we cannot be given preferential treatment over the Japanese, or at least equal treatment in this area, and that we be given an equal opportunity to be employed on cannery tenders and that the old sockeye and coho salmon boundary lines be restored to give us a better chance of earning our living. At present we are unable, owing to the treatment received and owing to conditions above-mentioned, to earn sufficient to maintain ourselves and our families; and when it is considered that the average Japanese saves his money to send it home and that he buys a considerable portion of his food, etc. from Japan, and when it is considered that the natives, to a large extent, have adopted the habits of the white men and spend all their money in this country buying food, clothing, etc., from the various merchants and factories, we feel we should receive better treatment than we have from the government in the matter of boundaries, etc., and better treatment from the canneries in the matter of employment, the use of gear and in the matter of licenses.

The conditions of the Naas River district, instead of getting better, are gradually getting worse, and the time is not far distant, if present conditions continue, when it will be impossible for us to earn a livelihood there. We trust, therefore, that you will use your good offices to see that we obtain more protection in the matter of boundary lines, licenses, etc., and that you will use your good offices and take this matter up with the canneries and give us every possible assistance under the circumstances.

Yours truly,

FIGHT AGAINST RELIGIONS IN SOVIET RUSSIA

Sects Not Connected With Orthodox Church Looked On as Most Dangerous

MOSCOW, Aug. 21.—Atheism has become almost a state creed in the "Holy Russia" of the Tsars. Under the constitution the Soviet Government recognizes the two principles of freedom for all forms of religious faith and separation of church and state. But renunciation of all forms of religious belief is a condition of membership in the ruling Communist party and its junior organization, the Union of Communist Youth, and no effort of agitation and propaganda is spared to wean away the peoples of the Soviet Union from all religious practices.

One may distinguish two elements in the Communist hostility toward religion. There is first the theoretical conviction that any religious interpretation of life, no matter how liberal or rationalistic it may be, is incompatible with the teachings of Marxian materialism, which, for Communists, possess dogmatic authority. Then there is the practical political consideration that the Russian Orthodox Church, which was so closely associated in many ways with the Tsarist regime, could not be expected to maintain a very loyal attitude toward a revolutionary government which, besides sweeping the church of its landed wealth and cut off its subsidies from state sources.

During the first years of the revolution this political consideration was uppermost in the minds of the Soviet leaders. Heavy blows were directed against the Orthodox Church, many of its bishops and priests were imprisoned, and some were executed on charges of counter-revolutionary activity. But the sectarians, or dissidents from the Orthodox Church, who were subjected to persecution in pre-war times were as a general rule left alone, although their pastors were subjected to the same disabilities as the Orthodox priests in being deprived of civic rights.

Lately, however, there has been a change; and it would scarcely be an exaggeration to say that the main spearhead of the intensified anti-religious campaign of the last year has been turned against the sectarians, among whom the two most numerous groups, among whom are the Baptists and the Evangelical Christians. While attendance at the services of the Orthodox Church has unquestionably declined, in comparison with pre-war figures, the sectarians have been growing in membership by leaps and bounds, especially among the peasantry, and also in some working class cities and regions, notably, in Leningrad and in the Donetz coal basin. An active anti-religious agitator with whom I talked declared:

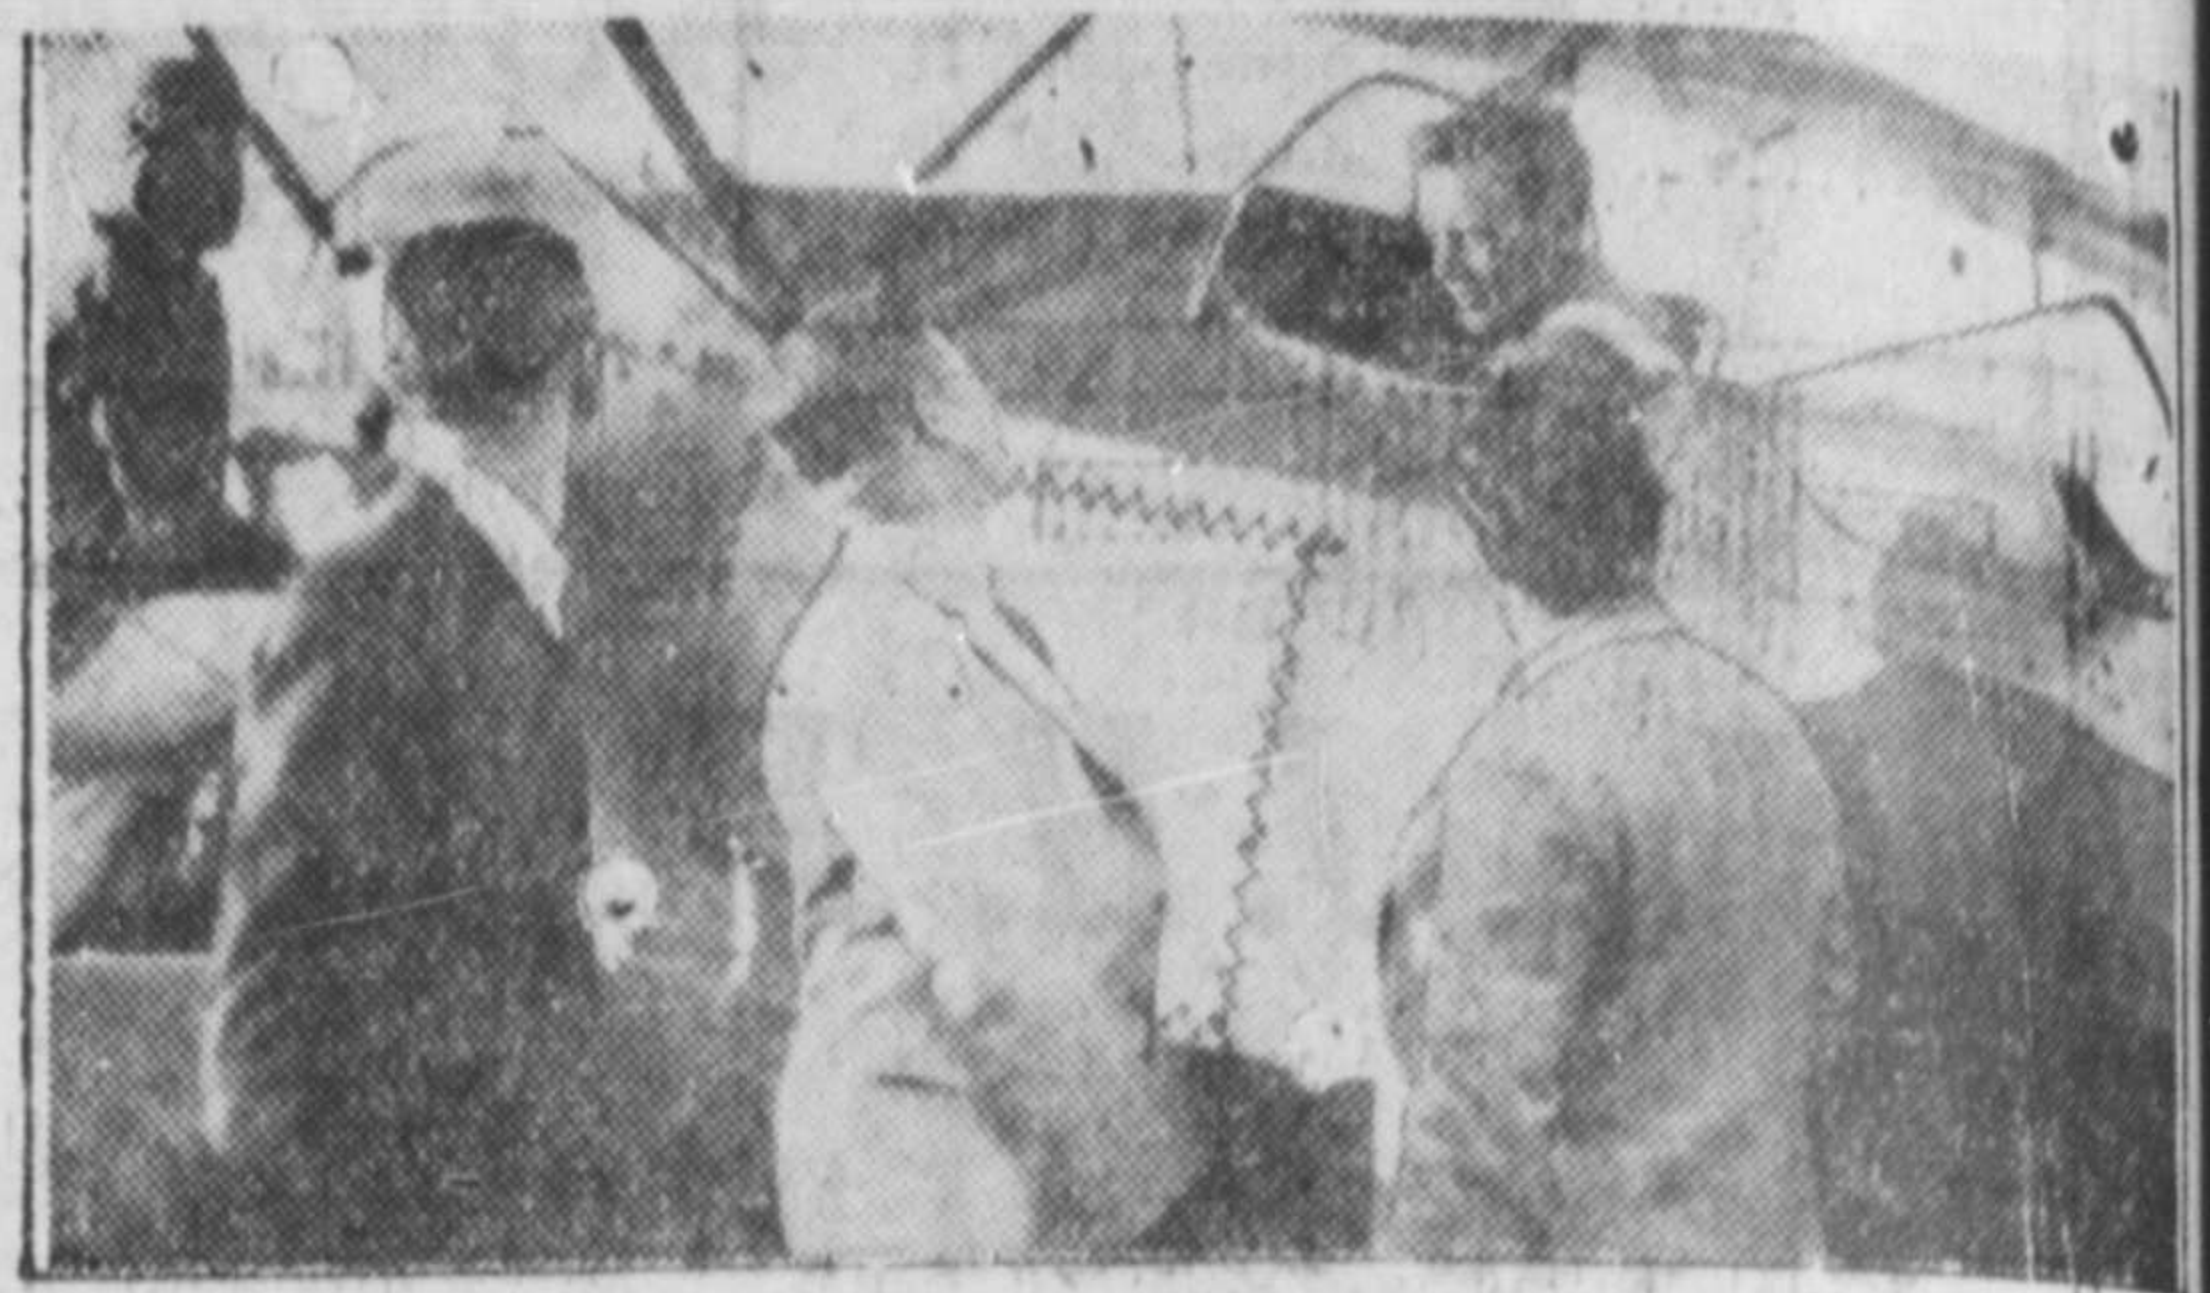

"The sectarians are our most dangerous enemies, because they have discarded the more superstitious forms of religion and do not teach things that may be easily disproved by science and commonsense."

Membership Trebled

It is estimated that there are now almost a million members of various dissident sects, which represents approximately treble the pre-war membership. When families and sympathizers are included it is calculated that the sectarian movement in Russia affects several million persons. A recent law, regulating the activity of religious societies in the Soviet Union, contains two or three provisions which strike at the heart of two main aspects in the extension of sectarian activity; the sending out of missionaries from central headquarters and the extension of church activity into educational, recreational, and benevolent fields. One clause of this law provides that "the region of activity of ministers of cults, religious preachers, etc., is limited to the place of residence of the religious unit which they serve and the place of existence of the corresponding house of worship." This is pretty definitely aimed at itinerant preachers and missionaries.

Thrilling Mystery Story In 30 chapters

THE GREEN SHADOW

by HERMAN LONDON

SYNOPSIS

Police Captain Summers is meditating on the escapades of the Picaroon, whom he is convinced is really his friend, Martin Dale. Mr. Alexander Ferrymann calls to relate a tale of strange happenings at 262 Bank Street and requests police investigation. Axelsson, a watchman employed by Ferrymann, has heard footsteps and seen an eerie green light. Ferrymann is showing the captain a picture when the telephone rings. A voice tells of finding a woman's body at the above address—the dead woman is Ferrymann's wife. Summers finds only one clue, a bit of green lens.

Meantime, the Picaroon has written a note to Adele Castle requesting a meeting in Central Park. Adele has had a terrifying experience. Taken by a mysterious Miss Conway to a strange light through which she could glimpse only the faint outline of a man, calling himself Dr. Moffett, she is told that her father has been connected with a crooked financial deal. Dr. Moffett demands $100,000 for his silence and certain papers.

Adele and Dale meet. He tells her he was present during her strange interview with Dr. Moffett and promises to help her. Dale also meets Adele's friend, Paul Almsworth. They become suspicious of one another. Dale "on his own" enters the house where the murder occurred and is trapped within by Summers, Ferrymann and Axelsson, who discover Dale taking a rope of pearls from behind a sliding panel. Dale darkens the room, throws Axelsson through a window, and in the resultant confusion escapes.

Summers at luncheon next day receives a note and package from the Picaroon. In the package he finds the missing pearls.

Meantime, Dr. Moffett is getting anxious and telephones, giving Miss Castle just 24 hours in which to make payment to save her father from disgrace and prosecution.

Dale draws cash from his bank and makes an appointment with Adele. He then visits the Ferrymann home, agreeing to capture the murderer within a week.

INSTALLMENT TWENTY-SIX

"Did you see what that despicable ruffian tried to do?" she cried hotly.

"No, I just missed it," said Joan in her cooing voice. "But I can guess. Men are so beastly. Tried to steal a kiss, I suppose? The wretch!"

"He was drunk," said Adele, growing a little calmer. Disgustingly drunk. Otherwise I might not have minded so much."

"I understand, dearie." By the way of showing her sympathy Joan wound her arm around the other girl. "A kiss is rather nice sometimes, especially on a balcony in the moonlight, but who wants to be kissed by a distillery?"

Adele laughed. "I'm all right now. It's foolish to get angry with a drunken man, but I couldn't help it."

"He seemed to be all right while you were dancing," Joan observed. "I was watching you two. But then men are funny. They are all right until they get you out in some moonlit nook and then—look out! My Billy is that way. We had a dreadful spat the other day. Billy is awfully hot-headed, but I know how to manage him."

"How?" asked Adele, mildly amused by the naive chatter.

"Give me your recipe, and I may try it on the next Emperor who comes along."

"Well, I guess men are all alike, whether they are Emperors or just plain citizens. It's the little things that please most of them. They like a girl to remember their favorite colors in neckties and socks and such things. It needn't amount to much, just so it's something that falls in with their taste. Well, after our quarrel the other day I dashed over to the haberdasher's and bought Billy the darlinest necktie you ever saw."

"And did he approve of your selection?" asked Adele absently. With so many graver problems on her mind this conversation was becoming a little wearying.

"Did he approve?" Joan gushed. "Well I guess he did! It was a lovely tie, a bright blue with little yellow dots in it."

Of a sudden Adele leaned weakly against the balcony railing.

"Blue—yellow," she mumbled. The words by contrast with the inconsequential appearance of the speaker, had conveyed an added shock in addition to their intrinsic significance.

"Yes, blue and yellow—Billy's favorite colors," said Joan. She laughed lightly. And then, with a subtle change in her manner, she came a little closer to Adele. Her smile had altered; it was less open and naive. She seemed more mature, even a little taller as she stood with the moon gleaming on her tinsel armor.

"Drop it over the railing," she whispered.

"Drop—what?" asked Adele dully.

"You know. The money, of course. You brought it, didn't you?" There was a vague hint of menace in her voice.

Adele nodded. Her mind, stunned by the sudden surprise, was not functioning as yet.

"Then let's hurry and get it over. It has all been arranged in advance. I am to drop a lighted match over the railing. That will be the signal." She produced a small silver case and extracted a match. "The moment the match falls you are to drop the money. Some one is waiting below to catch it."

Adele looked down, but all she could see was a black, yawning depth. Her brain swam a little. She glanced at the door, wondering whether Dale was on the other side, trying to overhear what was being said. She wished he could send her a thought wave advising her how to act. Again her eyes scanned the abyss outside the railing. Who was waiting down there? Whoever he was, he had certainly guarded in a most ingenious way against being caught in the act of receiving blackmail money.

She shook herself as if to banish a stupor.

"The papers?" she asked feebly.

"They're here." Joan loosened her flimsy armor on one side and took out a bulky envelope. "Most of them are in Daniel Forrester's own handwriting. If you have any doubts, look them over."

It sounded candid and above board. Adele removed the contents of the envelope, about a dozen papers of various sizes. It was too dark to see much, and the written characters swam before her eyes. From the inside came the orchestral din, adding to the confusion of her mind.

"Do you want a light?" Joan suggested. She struck a match, cupped her hands over it, and held it so the wavering sheen fell on the papers. "I want you to be satisfied with your purchase."

Adele started to run her eyes over the written lines. The phraseology was strange, full of technical terms and involved meanings and much of it she could not understand. But the broad outlines were clear. They showed plainly that her father was the mysterious Mr. Graves, the accomplice of the notorious Daniel Forrester. Little by little her doubts left her. Yes, these must be some of the damning documents to which Dr. Moffett had alluded in the course of that strange interview.

The Skyrocket

The papers shook in her trembling hand. Indignation, bitterness, a strange, rebellious excitement were growing apace within her. Her poor father! What an inferno of anguish he had passed through on account of the secret guilt which these papers revealed! She read on and on, turned page after page, while her companion struck match after match. At length she was through. She gazed down at the sheaf of papers. Only papers, flimsy, inflammable stuff, yet how devastatingly vital they were!

"Satisfied?"

Adele looked up. In the dim light she studied the other girl's face. Joan had cast off her artlessness and simplicity, and the unmasked portions of her face looked a little hard and cruel, but there was no sign of duplicity. The eyes were gazing at her narrowly, intently, through the openings in the black mask.

"Another match, please," Adele murmured.

In the yellow flicker she studied the writing again, but her thoughts raced far beyond the margins. Only a few sheets of paper, yet they were charged with the power to wreck lives! Luridly the light of the match fell on characters penned in a crude robust hand. Still another match. The yellow sheen seemed to blaze a path through a corner of her mind. If she could only—

Her heart beat a little faster. If she could only thrust a little corner of the sheaf of paper within the flame's destroying reach! In imagination she saw them wrinkle and become a black flake. Her father's secret reduced to ashes!

Her heart pounded chokingly. The little flame was beginning to dwindle, but there was still time. And then, at an instant's glance, she caught a look of intent watchfulness out of the holes in Joan's mask. A little smile, hard and subtly threatening, played about the rouged lips. The match went out. Adele shook herself. A mad hope had died with the match. Besides, she suddenly recalled, all the papers were not here, only half of them. The remaining ones were probably just as effective.

She felt the little packet of money inside her bodice. It was only a little over $2000, but a small fraction of the stipulated amount. To toss it over the railing seemed such a simple thing to do. But surely the woman at her side would not be taken in by such shallow deception. She would insist upon examining the money before the papers were surrendered. At a glance she would see through the ruse, and then—what would happen then?

"Well, Miss Castle," said Joan impatiently. "Aren't you satisfied yet?"

Adele tried to play for time. There was nothing else to do.

"Are you sure these papers are genuine?"

"Genuine? Of course. They're in Forrester's own handwriting."

Adele felt an ache of indecision. Where was Dale? If he would only transmit a message of some kind! Her wits appeared to have deserted her in the first great crisis of her sheltered and soft-cushioned existence. She must gain a little more time.

"Just another match, please."

"It will be the last," said Joan. "There is only one more left, and I must save that for the signal."

Again Adele bent her eyes to the papers. Daniel Forrester's kinky signature sprawled beneath her burning gaze. A fugitive doubt assailed her again while she tried to make the most of her speeding moments. Never before had she seen Forrester's handwriting. For all she knew, this might be a forgery. Her stampeding brain steadied to the thought. Just before the match went out she bent another look of critical scrutiny on the signature.

"Just as I thought," she declared, "this is only a copy—a forgery."

Her companion's short laugh cut clear and hard through the crashing syncopation of the orchestra.

"You poor little fool! You are only making a stupid bluff. You never saw Daniel Forrester's signature. Now I know you didn't bring the money. You have only been playing for time. Now I'm—"

She stopped short. From the dark depth below came a little sizzling sound. A little streak of fire immediately shot into the air and broke into a burst of sparks.

Joan snatched the papers away from Adele.

"The deal is off," she declared, a faint hiss in her voice. "That was a warning. There is something wrong below. Go back to your drunken Emperor!"

It was very evenly contested, Anyox copping the tournament by a margin of two points, the games being in points, Anyox 78, Alice Arm 76, with nine sets played.

Those making up the Anyox team were Messrs Stevens, McRae, McIntyre and Oatman and Mesdames Eve, Cundill, Fricker and Miss Blakey.

The Alice Arm players were Messrs. A. Falconer, T. Falconer, L. Falconer, G. Hanson and Mrs. Kergin, Misses A. Hogberg and A. Kergin.

The standing of the two clubs is now even as Alice Arm won the first tournament on the Anyox courts by a singular margin of two points.

GIANTS WIN FROM CUBS

Philadelphia Athletics Beaten by St. Louis Browns Yesterday

NEW YORK, Aug. 21.—Joe Bush, ace of the Chicago Cubs' pitching string, lost his third game of the season to the New York Giants yesterday after winning 17 games during the season. The Cubs won, however, in the second game with Carlson on the mound.

Paul Waner hit a homer with two on in the seventh, but the Phillies defeated the Pirates, nevertheless.

Zachary won his ninth straight game for the Yankees, though he was relieved by Moore in the seventh.

A homer by Kress with one on in the sixth gave the St. Louis Browns victory over the Philadelphia Athletics.

Yesterday's scores:

National League
Chicago 1-1, New York 4-0, St. Louis 3-0, Brooklyn 2-4, Pittsburgh 6, Philadelphia 8, Cincinnati 6, Boston 2.

American League

PRINCE RUPERT, B. C.

Sport Chat

The baseball games between Anyox and Prince Rupert Elks' teams at the smelter town last week were about the best exhibitions of the sport that have been seen in the northern town this season. The second game, in which both teams played errorless ball behind superb pitching, the Anyox nine winning 2 to 1, was "one of the best games seen here for a number of years," comments the Alice Arm and Anyox Herald. In the first game, which Prince Rupert won 4 to 1, Ole Haveland hurled and Spiro Gurvich caught. The battery was the same in the second game and it functioned excellently. In fact, the local boys played better baseball while away than they have done on several occasions while playing league fixtures on the home diamond. The Anyox battery for the first game was Orr and Somerville and, in the second, Lazarek and Somerville.

Followers of the Philadelphia Athletics, confident now that Connie Mack again will pilot a pennant-winner, are pulling for their favorite to beat the Cubs' record of 1906, but it is rather a faint hope now. In that year the Cubs, under the leadership of the late Frank Chance, won the National League pennant with 116 victories and 36 defeats for a percentage of .767. The Athletics of 1929, up to June 30, had travelled at a .750 pace, having a record of 48 wins and 16 defeats. They then slowed a bit, winning 22 and losing nine games up to July 29. That was playing at a .709 pace and made their total, 70 games won and 25 lost for a percentage of .737. Yesterday they had won 83 games and 33. If the Athletics are to equal the Cubs' record they will have to win about all of their remaining games. Last season, Yankees, with a lead of 13 games after midseason, were in a way to equal the Cubs' record but a slump all but wiped their lead and the Yankees were lucky to barely beat out the Athletics for the pennant.

SOFTBALL POSTPONED

Rain again caused the postponement of last night's C.S. softball game between the superintendent's Office and Ross House. The next game scheduled is for tomorrow evening between Dry Dock and Superintendent's Office.

How can you expect a poor fish to get upstream to its spawning grounds, or a baby fish to go downstream from its birthplace, when it has to climb over a man-made dam? The above design of the Patent Office drawing of Frank W. Province's piscatorial escalator shows how the fish can be helped. It takes the shape of a cone, around which winds a flume which has a sloping floor. Apart from being of interest to the fish, it is also so designed to allow for the housing of turbines so that the water power of the "stair" may be converted into electricity.

INDIA LECTURE IS INTERESTING

Brigadier Carter of Winnipeg Speaker at Special Meeting in Salvation Army Citadel Here

Brigadier George R. Carter of Winnipeg addressed a large audience in the local Salvation Army citadel last night, dealing in an interesting manner with his life and experiences in India, where he spent fourteen years engaged in Army work. He was assisted by Mrs. Carter, who was with him in India.

In the course of his lecture, Brigadier Carter emphasized the important work in which the Salvation Army has been engaged in India. As important work as any was that of a medical nature, there being five fully equipped hospitals operated by the Army, as well as nine dispensaries, some of which were itinerant and went around the country on trucks. Brigadier Carter, in this connection, told of some of the medical and dental work he himself had been called upon to perform.

The Army had now 5000 officers and employees in India, Brigadier Carter stated. There were 600 day schools throughout the country operated by the Army, four rescue homes, three homes for stranded Europeans, seventeen farm colonies, twenty-nine boarding schools, and the Army now had close to one million Salvationists and adherents in the vast country.

Brigadier Carter also referred to the great work among the criminal tribes of India, which the Army had undertaken at the request of the British government. There were three million persons in these criminal tribes which the authorities knew of. Having started the work twenty years ago, the Army now had five thousand of these former criminals in its care. The parents were being taught useful trades and the children were being educated. Many had been converted to Christianity from their heathen ways.

The brigadier described modes of life and conditions generally in India, and, in this connection, was assisted by Mrs. Carter as well as several Army members who took the platform in native costume. Among those who assisted were Misses Ena Anderson, Edith Leek, Dolly Smith, Annie Smith, Elva Pierce, Capt. E. Warren and Capt. Joyce (Winnipeg).

Volunteer For Service

The meeting was opened with prayer by Mrs. Joyce and Brigadier and Mrs. Carter were introduced by Adjutant William Kerr. Mrs. Carter read from scripture.

At the close of the meeting, Brigadier Carter called for volunteers for Army officership and three young women, in response, dedicated themselves to the work.

Such is the complex predicament in which the fascinating Reginald Denny finds himself in his latest starring comedy, "Clear the Decks," which opens at the Capitol Theatre tonight.

"Clear the Decks" is a laugh-crammed cyclonic comedy of the high seas which affords the incomparable Denny the gay, care-free, swift-moving type of role that has so endeared him to the hearts of his thousands of admirers.

PROTEST MADE AGAINST PLANS ALICE ARMSALE

ALICE ARM, Aug. 21:—The question of the final disposition of the Indian Reserve at Alice Arm, which has been the cause of more or less agitation for the past 15 years as between the settlers and locators upon it and the government, has its day of ending in sight and will end upon a high note. That is, since the receipt of the notice from the government last week by all locators upon the Reserve, that the date of auction would be the fifth of September, the agitation culminated in a called public meeting of all locators, at which a protest was formulated and sent to the government regarding the manner and method of the sale of auction.

This protest was based upon the grounds that no maps or plans of the townsite are available and no one has been able to procure one, hence the uncertainty and confusion as to where the lots are located, their boundaries, etc. That, contrary to precedent, no credits will be given for improvements or houses located upon lots by their owners, that if all houses are not removed from sold lots within 60 days, the owners forfeit their rights thereto, that no terms, plans or conditions are given as to the sale of lots and to the shortness of the notice of sale, which is less than 30 days. In view of the withholding of this information by the government, it was generally expressed at the meeting of the locators that the townsite would be bid in by some syndicate who had foreknowledge of the plans and terms of the government.

Some several score of inhabitants are located upon this Reserve which lies at the head of Alice Arm and on both sides of the Kitsault River. A great many of these locators are prospectors, who have claims and interests here and have paid taxes upon their houses and improvements for the past 15 years. Several rather costly houses have been built upon this townsite, for which if the owners are not allowed credits toward the auction of lot, will entail not only a sacrifice but a loss, as the 60 days' notice of removal, with the townsite minus any grading or clearing of streets, would prevent these buildings from being shifted.

While the notice does not so state, it is presumed that the auction sale of lots will take place upon the townsite at Alice Arm.
