Premier Says Government Looking Into Possibilities of Linking Up With Alaska

VICTORIA, Aug. 1.—In the first speech at Vancouver Island, Hon. R. B. Bennett at Bowkers Beach yesterday said regarding the proposed sockeye salmon treaty, "we want a treaty and we will do anything reasonable to support a treaty but what it means must be certain beyond peradventure."

As regard to the Empire trade, Bennett denied the charges that the Conservatives opposed its development. "We do not care though," he said, "whether it is Britain, France, United States or Italy, we are not going to give away our markets without getting something in return. But I will tell you also what we are for and that is an economic conference of component parts of the Empire so that we may get together and discuss with other parts what they produce and we do not."

Premier Tolmie said the Provincial Government was looking into the possibilities of linking up a road system from the United States through British Columbia. The Alaska administration had in mind the advantages that would accrue from bringing tourist traffic through the province to Alaska.

DATA BEING SECURED WITH VIEW TO ESTABLISHMENT OF SMELTER AT PRINCE RUPERT

There is a possibility that a smelter may be built in the neighborhood of Prince Rupert in the near future if it is found that there is sufficient ore to make the project likely to be a profitable one. F. G. Dawson, who returned this week from the east, took the matter up with interested parties while there and is anxious to secure the information which may make possible the industry. Following is Mr. Dawson's letter:

Editor, Daily News: When in Montreal I had an interview with financial interests who seemed to be keenly interested in the building of a smelter on the North Pacific coast, presumably at or near Prince Rupert, as it is their desire to be located where they will have the benefit of both rail and ocean transportation, also where a good supply of fresh water and electric power would be available.

They have requested me to secure and supply to them information that will be a basis from which they can decide whether or not such a project would be feasible, when they would immediately send a technical expert into the territory to check up and thoroughly investigate available and prospective tonnage. I am very desirous of obtaining, and forwarding them this information. Therefore, I would like to make an appeal, through your paper, to all interested parties to send me reliable information regarding their properties. Firstly, I would like to have the names of all the producing mines, giving the tonnage of each, and the classes of ore mined. Secondly, the names of the properties which are liable to be producers in one, two or three years, giving in each instance the class of ore they expect to mine, and where possible or feasible the approximate quantity they expect to produce. This latter information is very essential, as the prospective tonnage will have to be considered. I would suggest that in sending in estimates that they be conservative, as I would prefer that you under-estimate rather than over-estimate, as before anything of a definite constructive nature is done my report will be thoroughly investigated by an expert. This is a project in which I think every mining man in the district will be intensely interested and should send in promptly full and reliable information. I also had an interview in Montreal with officials of the Power Corporation of Canada, who assured me that they would not only be able to supply all the power required for such a project, but would co-operate in every possible way to assist.

HOME OIL TO SPLIT STOCKS

Plan Introduced to Retain Control for Present Shareholders

VANCOUVER, Aug. 1.—A stock split up by the Home Oil Company, was designed so that the present shareholders will retain control, is contemplated, according to J. C. Balfour, solicitor for the company. Balfour said that it was planned to form a new company with a capitalization of 10,000,000 shares of no par value of which 800,000 would be founders shares. In these there would be power to elect the majority of the Board of Directors. It is proposed to split the shares by giving one share of founders stock and five shares new stock for every share now held. The only distinction between founders' shares and the ordinary shares will be in voting power as all are practically equal in profits.

Hon. S.L. Howe Points to Cod Fisheries North as Possible for Canada

Minister Deals With One of Great Sources of Wealth of British Columbia at Morning Session of Fisheries Convention

This morning a paper was read by Hon. S. L. Howe, commissioner of fisheries in the Provincial Government, which dealt with the value of the fisheries of British Columbia and gave special attention to the salmon fisheries treaty between Canada and the United States which the Provincial Government endorses. One striking feature of the paper was that which mentioned the desirability of Canada entering the cod fishing industry. Already the United States is yearly catching cod on the banks off the coast of Alaska and the Aleutian Islands and Canada has an equal right to the same fish. It suggests that there is an opening for an industry in connection with it. The paper follows:

The Commissioner Said

It is both an honor and a pleasure to meet with you here today. As the commissioner of fisheries for the province, I bid you a hearty welcome to this, the leading fishing province of the Dominion. We pride ourselves on the fact that in each of the last twenty years our fisheries have exceeded a value those of any other province, and that for over a decade we have produced from 40 to 48 per cent of the total value of the fisheries of Canada. In 1927 we produced 47 per cent and in that year exceeded the value of the fishery products of Nova Scotia, the second in rank, by $12,480,000, and we also exceeded that of all the other provinces combined by $7,815,277. In 1927 the capital invested in British Columbia's fisheries was $31,117,986, or 55 per cent of Canada's total. The total number of persons engaged in British Columbia's fisheries in 1927 was 21,322, or 26 1/2 per cent of Canada's total of 80,112. In other words, in 1927, with 55 per cent of the capital invested in the fisheries of Canada and but 26 1/2 per cent of the total persons employed in them, British Columbia produced 47 per cent of the total value of the fisheries of the Dominion. Complete data for 1928 is not yet available, but we do know that in that year British Columbia's fisheries produced $26,562,691—or 48.3 per cent of Canada's total; Nova Scotia came second with $11,561,899—or 43 per cent less than British Columbia. It may interest you to note that our salmon, which are distinct from those of the Atlantic coast, produced $17,345,670—or 65 per cent of our total. Halibut came second with a value of $3,370,670; pilchards third, with $2,563,137; and herring fourth with $1,808,944. In addition, we produced some twenty other species of food fish having a combined value of $1,475,214. Pilchard Fisheries Of our leading fisheries all but the pilchards have been long exploited. The latter is of recent development. We were slow to appreciate their value and in utilizing them. Up to 1925 only a few cases were canned. Being too rich in oil to find a large market, either in a canned or fresh state, their use in fish reduction was authorized in 1925 and a great industry sprang into existence. In 1928 our fishermen caught 161,025,000 pounds, from which the twenty-three fish reduction plants on the west coast of Vancouver Island extracted 3,995,000 imperial gallons of oil and 14,500 tons of meal—having a combined value of $2,560,000. Contrast that value with the $82,845 produced in 1924. The development of our pilchard fishing should be an eye-opener to the potential wealth of the vast waters that lap our western ports. Take the cod, for instance. There are rich cod banks in the North Pacific and in Behring Sea, much nearer to our ports than the ports of California, whose fishermen yearly make profitable trips. Why do we not draw upon those banks? We have as much right. There must be a market. Nova Scotia fishermen in 1927 marketed cod valued at $2,423,699 and British Columbia but $470 worth. From my reading of the history of our fisheries I am struck with the idea that we know too little about them and that we should get busy and find out more about them. True we have a very complete record of our salmon and know enough of their life—history to conservingly administer them, but there is much we do not know. We know something of our halibut and are now wisely dealing with the fishery under a treaty with the United States, but apparently we know little of any of our other food fish. One of the first things I had to deal with officially was the pilchard and herring fisheries, and I was surprised to learn that little was known about them—other than the fact that we were drawing on them abundantly. We do not know whether we are making an overdraft on the supply or not. History is filled with the exploiting of certain food fishes. In no case that has come to my reading have governments and fishery interests seriously concerned themselves with the future (Continued On Page 2).

supply until declining catches indicated depletion. We owe it to ourselves and to those who come after us to maintain our natural food assets.

One of my first acts was to bring about a provincial and Dominion joint investigation of the life-history of our pilchards and herring and the condition of those fisheries. That investigation has just begun and I understand that it may take years of close and discriminating study to produce the facts essential to their conservation, and, in the meantime, such regulations as may be decided upon will be experimental. Such a statement indicates how necessary it is that governments should follow a progressive coherent policy of investigation of their fisheries—investigations conducted by trained biologists permanently employed. Huxley told us that we could not conserve any species of life without knowledge of its life-history. Let us then join hands and possess ourselves of the facts in the life-history of our food fish which are essential to their preservation. Your association can do much to that end.

International Aspect

Now let me refer to the international aspect of our halibut and salmon fisheries. As you know, the halibut fisheries of the North Pacific are being dealt with internationally under a treaty between Canada and the United States. They have federated their interests. They did so because investigation showed that most of the banks off the coast of B. C. and southeastern Alaska had been seriously depleted—that catches there have and are steadily declining and that, without joint and uniform regulation, they could not be maintained. The exchange of the halibut treaty was a notable event. It is the first treaty made by two independent governments for the investigation and regulation of a deep-sea fishery in which they were concerned. It was the first treaty signed by Canada. That treaty created an international fisheries commission which since 1925 has been conducting a thorough investigation of the life-history of the halibut and the condition of the fishery. That commission is doing a notable work, a work which I am assured has the support of the entire industry in Canada and the United States.

Let me deal with another treaty—the Fraser River sockeye treaty—which was signed by Canada and the United States in Washington last March. That treaty is the third attempt on the part of the two governments to reach a working agreement for the restoration of the sockeye salmon fishery of the Fraser River system. It is the result of twenty odd years of investigation, conferences and discussions. It is a federation of Canadian and United States interests. Each has made the concessions necessary to effect a joint and uniform administration of a gravely depleted fishery. I have given a great deal of consideration to all the provisions of the treaty.

The preamble of the treaty states that "the protection, preservation and extension of the sockeye fisheries in the Fraser River system are of common concern; that the supply of this fish in recent years has been gravely depleted, and that it is of the utmost importance in the mutual interests of both countries that this source of wealth should be restored and maintained."

DAHLBERG ACQUITTED

The case against J. Dahlberg was dismissed by Magistrate McClymont in the city police court this morning. The charge was that of keeping liquor for sale at the Shamrock rooms. It was tried Tuesday and yesterday and a decision acquitting Dahlberg was given this morning. T. W. Brown appeared for the defendant.

Provisions of Treaty

Article I. defines the treaty waters. They include all the waters in the state of Washington frequented by sockeye seeking the Fraser River in B. C. They are the same waters mentioned in the treaties of 1908 and 1920, both of which were ratified by Canada. They are the waters in which during the last twenty years close to 70 per cent of the sockeye taken in the Fraser system have been caught. The only addition made to treaty waters in the 1928 treaty—not included in the two first treaties—is an addition to the northern boundaries in B. C.—an extension from Point Atkinson northwestward to the southern end of Lasqueti Island, and thence south to Nanaimo. Facts developed by tagging at Deep Bay, Vancouver Island, made the inclusion of such waters necessary. In August 7 to 14, 1925, 519 sockeye salmon were caught, tagged and liberated at Deep Bay, 86 per cent of the recovered fish were caught in the Fraser River. Their capture in the Fraser finally demonstrated that some sockeye do approach the Fraser from the north between June 1 and August 20—the period in which the commission can regulate sockeye fishing. Having insisted that all the waters in the state of Washington frequented by sockeye salmon seeking the Fraser should be included in treaty waters, the Canadians could not and had no desire to exclude any similar waters in B. C.

Article II. of the treaty creates an international Pacific salmon fishery commission, consisting of three representatives of each government.

Article III. of the treaty gives the commission authority:

1. To "make a thorough investigation into the natural history of the Fraser sockeye salmon, into hatchery methods, spawning ground conditions and other related matters."
2. The commission shall "conduct sockeye salmon fish culture operations in treaty waters and to that end it shall have power to improve spawning grounds, acquire, construct and maintain hatcheries, rearing ponds and other such facilities as it may determine to be necessary for the propagation of sockeye salmon in the waters covered by this convention, and to stock the waters with sockeye salmon by such methods as it may determine to be most advisable."

Those two provisions delegated to the commission the power to investigate and propagate. The two governments are equally concerned in both regulation and propagation, by which it is hoped the sockeye of the Fraser can be restored. One is as essential to success as the other. Having federated their interests, each demands an equal say in all matters. A federation of interests could not be secured that did not give each of the two governments an equal voice. Neither could accept other than a joint interest. There is a diversity of opinion as to the best methods to pursue in propagation. The methods practiced in Canadian and United States hatcheries differ materially, and each claims that their own methods are the most productive. Many United States fish culturists insist that their propagation methods in the Columbia and in Alaska have been far more productive than those followed by Canada in the Fraser and other streams. That the best method may be determined, the present treaty, like those of 1908 and 1920, provides that the commission shall conduct propagation and share equally in the expense. The restoration of the sockeye fishery of the Fraser is a big undertaking and one that will call for the expenditure on propagation of large sums annually. It calls for almost all the expenditures under the treaty. It is just and right that the two governments should share the expense.

Article III. of the treaty provides that:

"The commission shall also have the authority to recommend to the two governments the removal of obstructions to the ascent of sockeye salmon in the waters covered by this convention, that may now exist or may from time to time occur."

It can recommend the removal of obstructions. It cannot remove obstructions. That right rests with the province, and not with the commission.

Powers of Commission

Article IV. of the treaty empowers the commission "between the first day of June and the twentieth day of August in any year, for the whole or any part of that period, to limit or prohibit the taking of sockeye salmon in respect of all the waters described in Article I. of this convention, or in respect of Canadian waters and waters of the United States separately, provided that when any order is adopted by the commission limiting or prohibiting the taking of sockeye in regard to Canadian waters or waters of the United States separately, it shall extend to all the Canadian waters or waters of the United States to which the convention applies."

Article VI. provides that "no action taken by the commission under Articles IV. and V. shall be effective unless it is affirmatively voted for by at least two of the commissioners from each country."

Article VII provides that "inasmuch as the treaty is to establish for the two governments by their joint effort and expense, a fishery that is now largely non-existent, each of the High Contracting Parties should share equally in the fishery. The Commission shall, consequently, in regulating the fishery do so with the object of enabling, as nearly as they can, an equal portion of the fish that is allowed to be caught each year to be taken by the fishermen of each High Contracting Party." That very important provision was not included in the two former treaties.

Article VIII of the treaty obligates the two governments to the enforcement of the regulations provided by the Commission, and they agree to enact and enforce the necessary legislation.

Article IX provides that the treaty "shall continue in force for a period of sixteen years, and thereafter until one year from the day on which either shall give notice to the other of its desire to terminate it."

Big Project

The restoration of the sockeye to the Fraser is a big and problematical project. It will take years of patient study and effort to restore the runs to anything approaching their former magnitude. The runs, as has been shown, are now small. Very few fish reach the beds. Egg collections for some years must of necessity be small. There are no fish-culturists in Canada or the United States who believe that runs to the Fraser can be restored to their former magnitude in sixteen years. In this connection let me refer to the conditions in the Fraser previous to depletion and to the deplorable conditions which now exist. In the former big years 1897 to 1913 the combined Canadian and United States catches of sockeye produced an average pack of 1,777,000 cases. In 1913 the combined catch produced a pack of 2,400,000 cases, and in the small years up to 1898, 1899 and 1900 the pack averaged 648,000 cases. In the last eight years the average yearly pack has not exceeded 125,000 cases. In 1913 there were forty salmon canneries on the Fraser in B.C. and close to 6,000 men engaged in the fishery. There are now but seven canneries on the Fraser and less than 1,000 men engaged. The records show unquestionably that the great runs of former years consisted of sockeye bred in the Fraser and that they were the product of the abundant seeding of the spawning areas of the Fraser. The records also show that the scant runs of recent years have been due to a failure to seed the beds—to the fact that very few sockeye have spawned there. The spawning area of the Fraser has not been lessened, damaged or interfered with. Its gravelled beds and shoals are as extensive and suitable for spawning as they ever were. Its lake waters are as abundantly filled with the natural foods for the development of young sockeye. The channels of the Fraser are open and free to the passage of salmon. All that is required to produce the great runs of the past is a sufficient number of spawning sockeye to seed the beds as abundantly as they were seeded in former big years. The fishery cannot be restored in any other way.

Neither Canada nor the United States acting singly can provide the measures necessary to ensure the abundant seeding of the beds. That can only be accomplished by concurrent action. Joint, uniform and continuous regulation is essential. The interests of both Canada and the United States in this project are great. It is an international undertaking and cannot be dealt with successfully in any other way than by a treaty.

which now awaits the ratification by Canada and the United States. In that treaty each government has temporarily assigned for a limited period to a joint commission the right to investigate, regulate and propagate the sockeye salmon of the Fraser system and each delegates to a joint commission the specific powers necessary for the accomplishment of a great undertaking.

The Provincial Government has earnestly considered the treaty in the light of the golden past history of the industry, and in the light of the lamentable present and we have satisfied ourselves, with the help of our expert advisers, that the efficient carrying-out of the terms of this treaty will be of immeasurable benefit to one of our greatest industries. The government of B.C. endorses the treaty. Without the treaty one of her greatest food assets—an asset formerly worth many millions of dollars a year—cannot be restored.

Mr. President and Gentlemen, I hope your visit to the Province will be productive of great good to all the people of Canada. I anticipate with interest your proceedings. I thank you.

A Bench For Two

Dale jumped into a taxi and hurried away to keep the appointment of which he had spoken. His face had worn a light frown when he left the restaurant but it changed quickly to a whimsical expression. At one of the entrances to Central Park he dismissed the taxi and walked briskly inside. A girl was seated on a bench, and he gave her a quick and unobtrusive inspection, then raised his hat.

"I believe you are Miss Adele Castle," he murmured.

"Yes," said Adele, regarding him a little doubtfully out of her dark, troubled eyes. "But you"—she hesitated—"certainly you are not the Picaroon."

"Why not?" he asked lightly, casually noting the trim lines of her smartly garbed figure.

"You don't look a bit—er—vicious."

Dale laughed. "You can never go by appearances. I may be a wolf in sheep's clothing."

Her lips relaxed a little. "Anyway, sheep's clothing is becoming to you."

"Thanks. Is there room for two on that bench?"

She edged away a little, making room for him, and she was still regarding him with a shy, questioning glance.

"I'm glad you came," said Dale, sitting down beside her. "I was not sure you would."

"Well, I hesitated a bit, but when one is desperate, then there is nothing to do but clutch at whatever straw may come along."

Dale nodded. He twirled his stick between his knees and gazed out over the rolling greensward and the trees in the autumnal coloring. There was a warm haze over it all, and a certain tender feeling was pulsing wistfully through the beauty of the landscape.

"Forgive me if I speak bluntly," he murmured. "Your father is the mysterious Mr. Graves. Dr. Moffett knows it—"

A gasp came from the girl beside him.

"Dr. Moffett has documentary evidence which proves that your father is the mysterious Mr. Graves," Dale calmly continued, "and he has placed an outrageous price on his silence, a price which your father is unable to meet even if he were so inclined. That's the situation in a nutshell, isn't it?"

The girl shrank away from him a little. "How do you know all that?"

"It is true, isn't it?"

"Yes!" The little word came on a fluttering whisper. "But I don't understand—"

"It isn't necessary that you should understand just at present, Miss Castle, do you think you could trust me?"

She looked at him solemnly and with a quaver. "I have no choice. I am at your mercy. You seem to have information in your possession that could destroy my father."

"Nonsense, Miss Castle. You are not at my mercy. You don't believe for a moment that I would use the information I have in an unprincipled manner. Do you?"

"No," she replied faintly, after a little period of hesitation, during which she scanned his frank expression and clear-cut features.

"No, I don't believe you would."

"Thank you," Dale said gently. "I don't believe you would betray me, either. By inference I have admitted that I am the Picaroon. You are the first and only person to whom I have made such an admission. Of course, he chuckled softly, 'there are not witnesses to this exchange of confidences. I can be frank without jeopardizing my safety. But I don't believe you would harm me even if you could."

"No, I wouldn't. That wouldn't be playing fair. Besides"—and with an expression of doubt and keen curiosity she gazed at him incredulously. She scanned his face—"I don't believe even now that you are the Picaroon."

"Tell that to Summers," Dale laughed. "Now, Miss Castle, let us face a few facts. This Dr. Moffett appears to be a villainous old soul. Neither you nor I have seen him but we have heard his voice. Rather pleasant voice, rather pleasant voice, hasn't he?"

"Yes, but I had a feeling he was disguising it."

"So did I. You were closer to him than I. What did you see?"

"A rich green light like velvet." Adele shivered a little. She had not yet grown accustomed to the presence of this strange man who in some intimate way appeared to have acquired a knowledge of the facts that concerned her most vitally. "I also saw a figure, but it was very shadowy. The face I couldn't see at all. There seemed to be a cloud over it."

Dale nodded understandingly. "You found it a bit spooky, of course. That's what Doctor Moffett intended. One of his objects was to make you feel that it would be useless to resist a man like him. I don't believe he quite succeeded. I don't think you are easily frightened."

"Oh, but I was. I was all chills and fevers for a while."

"But only for a while. The net result fell short of Doctor Moffett's aim. So far he has been successful in his secondary aim, however. He has preserved his anonymity. Probably there is no such person as Doctor Moffett. We wouldn't know him if we should come face to face with him. Even the voice we heard was disembodied."

"You heard it too?"

"I was there."

"In the room with the green light?"

He smiled mysteriously.

"I was not far away. I heard every word. Let me tell you a secret. The Picaroon visited Doctor Moffett's house one dark night about a month ago. It was just chance that brought him there that time. He didn't see Doctor Moffett, but he observed a number of curious things. He decided to make a return visit and find out some more. That's how he happened to be present during your interview with the doctor."

"Oh, I see," she smiled faintly, but soon her face sobered again. "He told me he is the ugliest man in creation. That's one reason why he doesn't want to be seen. Now, if we should come face to face with a very ugly man—"

Dale laughed. "Yes, that would shatter Doctor Moffett's anonymity. If he really is as ugly as he told you, then he would be very conspicuous in a crowd. But it's possible he told you a lie."

"I hadn't thought of that."

"Well, we can't be certain. Maybe he lied, or maybe he told the truth."

"He also said that he is suffering from a nervous ailment that makes his eyes sensitive to most colors except green."

BATTING SPREE OF TWO TEAMS

Gehrig Led With a Homer For the Yanks; Klein Makes Thirty-Third Homer

NEW YORK, Aug. 1.—Led by Gehrig who got his twenty-sixth homer, the Yankees slugged 17 safe hits to swamp the White Sox, the final score being sixteen to two.

Philadelphia Athletics went on a batting spree scoring nine runs in the fifth inning after being held to one hit before that by Carroll for the Detroit team.

In a double header Boston won the first and lost the second to Cleveland. In the first game the four runs which gave them the victory were scored in the seventh inning, three on Rhynes' bludge.

Pittsburgh Pirates went down hill when Klein and Hurst hit homers for Philadelphia. It was Klein's thirty-third homer.

Boston Nationals broke the Cubs' winning streak of nine, and pounded two hurters for 13 hits.

Scores for the day were as follows:

NATIONAL LEAGUE
New York 1, Cincinnati 2.
Brooklyn 2-8, St. Louis 3-2.
Philadelphia 6, Pittsburgh 2.
Boston 7, Chicago 1.

AMERICAN LEAGUE
Chicago 2, New York 16.
Detroit 1, Philadelphia 10.
Cleveland 0-6, Boston 4-2.
St. Louis 5, Washington 1.
Boston 7-3, Chicago 1-6.

DOUBLEHEADER AT SOFTBALL

Station Beats Fish Packers and Then Is Defeated By Drydock

In a double header softball game last night, The Station team beat the Halibut Packers 9 to 6, and lost to the Drydock 3 to 4.

There was lots of fun in the first game with both teams playing good ball. It was the first time we knew Menzies packed fish, but he seemed to have gurry all over his hands and made the ball very slippery, otherwise he did pretty good. Dougherty pitched nice ball and Starr received very good for the fishermen.

Stiles catching for the Station and Holby pitching are a hard combination to beat. There will be another game between the same teams shortly as the fishermen think they can trim the Station.

Station—Stiles, B. Skattebol, McIntosh, Horton, Thomas, Holby, Cooten, Parks, Stalker.

Halibut Packers—Kirkendall, Stiles, Gilker, Dougherty, Hanson Pierce, Menzies, Chenoweth, Starr.

Drydock Wins

The second game was air tight ball from the beginning, the Station getting one run in the first and two in the eighth, the Drydock getting one in the second, one in the seventh and two in the eighth. There were no outstanding players in this game, they were all good. A few more games like this will put softball on the map in Prince Rupert as one of its leading games.

Drydock—Gawthorne, Smith, Kelsey, Hedstrom, McKeown, Reid, McPhee, Howe, Palmer.

Station—Stiles, B. Skattebol, McIntosh, Horton, Thomas, Holby, A. Skattebol, Parks, Morrison.

DELEGATES TO CONVENTION ENTERTAINED

Number of Little Events For Visitors Particularly the Ladies

There was quite a gay scene at the railway station yesterday afternoon, when a great many people went out to greet the delegates to the fisheries convention. About twenty of the party arrived including a number of ladies and they were met by a committee and taken to the hotel.

A committee of local ladies took charge of the ladies of the party and, they, along with other ladies connected with the convention, were entertained at tea in the Stirling Tea Rooms, Second Ave., the affair being in the hands of Mrs. T. H. Johnson and Mrs. Fred Mathers.

Some of the delegates were entertained at dinner by local people and later in the evening most of them staid at the Prince Rupert Club. The executive of the Fisheries Association held a meeting to arrange details for the convention today.

All of the delegates who cared to go were entertained at the Capitol Theatre where loge seats were placed at their disposal.

This morning the ladies visited the Fisheries Experimental station and at noon they joined the men for the official photograph at the Government buildings. An informal luncheon was held at the Boston Cafe and this afternoon they are the guests at a reception given at the home of Mr. and Mrs. George Bushby.

WALTER CLAYTON IS MEMBER OF CONVENTION, LIVED HERE FORMERLY

One of the interesting personalities of the fisheries convention is Walter Clayton of St. John's, Newfoundland, of the W. Clayton Construction Company, whose father designed the cold storage plant in Prince Rupert. He lived here until twelve years ago. He went to the war and on his return settled in Newfoundland and went into business for himself.

Mr. Clayton is much pleased with Prince Rupert. He says he sees wonderful improvements. He is renewing old acquaintances and enjoying his visit immensely. He has been a member of the Fisheries Association for fourteen years.

Local Items

Mrs. G. T. Hibbard left on this morning's train for a two week holiday trip to Lake Kithlayn.

Mr. and Mrs. George Letts and infant daughter, arrived on the steamer Camosun, 20 years ago today.

Miss Mabel McInlyre of the staff of the Prince Rupert hospital left on this morning's train for a three-week holiday visit to her home in Smithers.

Acropolis Hill has been given for the use of the Fisheries Convention visitors on Saturday afternoon and the public are requested not to use the grounds on that occasion.

AS PLANNED

Archie's finances worried his friends rather more than they did him. One day an acquaintance said to him: "See here, Archie, you'll get into an awful hole buying so many things on tick. What do you do when these deferred payments come due?" "Oh, easy," said Archie. "I defer paying them."—Montreal Star.

They know a good thing when they see it for there isn't a better product anywhere than those made in B. C. There are three firms here making knitted goods and their wares are world-famous. Their products are preferred in every country where quality and style are important."
