RAIN TOO LATE TO SAVE CROP TANKER MINA BREA BURNS

Only Few Prairie Points Will Have Average Yield This Year

WINNIPEG, Aug. 10.—Very little change has occurred in the crop situation during the week, according to the fifteenth weekly report of the Canadian National Railways. Rains on August 4 and 5 are reported from a number of points in Manitoba and on the Rossburn, Rapidcity, Cromer and other subdivisions improved filling is observed as a result. Two or three extremely hot days, however, have tended to counteract the benefits of lighter precipitation at other points, and with cutting more general relief from this source has arrived too late. Neepawa reports crops more promising as they approach maturity. Slight rust infection appears at a number of points, but no material damage is expected. Barley cutting is well under way and in some cases threshing. Wheat cutting should be general from August 12 to 15.

Rains have also occurred at many Saskatchewan points. Though arriving too late to be of general material benefit, they have been accompanied by cooler weather. Hail damage at Calder is estimated at 100 per cent on 600 acres, while 50 per cent and minor losses are reported from Avonlea and Ceepee respectively. Cutting of rye and barley is well advanced and wheat cutting should start next week, becoming general about August 15. The short straw is making harvesting difficult in many central and southern areas. Heavy rains in Alberta have not greatly affected the outlook for the province. On the Vegreville subdivision improved filling of late crops is anticipated and Corning subdivision now foresees an average crop, but in other sections of the central portion of the province little change in the estimate is made.

Well Known Ship at This Port Evacuated by Officers and Crew Off Nova Scotia Coast

The Imperial Oil Co.'s tanker Mina Brea, well known at Prince Rupert through many calls at this port, was abandoned by her crew last week off Cranberry Head light near Canso, N.S., after having caught fire. Fire had eaten its way through the coal bunkers and was threatening a cargo of gasoline and refined. The ship, it was feared, would be a total loss so the crew evacuated to save their lives.

Up till four months ago, the Mina Brea was engaged in carrying oil between California and the British Columbia coast and was a frequent visitor here. She was built in Scotland in 1909 and was a vessel of 2566 tons. Capt. Galway was in command when the fire broke out.

WEDDING WAS PRETTY EVENT

Sun Shone Brightly as Miss Lancaster Became Bride of Eddie Smith

On Saturday St. Andrew's pro-cathedral was beautifully decorated when the marriage of Margorie Isabel Arch, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Lancaster, to Edward James, eldest son of D. E. Smith, Richmond, Quebec, was solemnized by Rt. Rev. G. A. Rix, Bishop of Caledonia, assisted by Rev. J. B. Gibson, the rector.

The service was fully choral. Ewart Lyne presiding at the organ. The high esteem and popularity of the contracting parties was reflected in the large number present at the ceremony. Both have been long resident in the city and have achieved in unique measure the good will of all who knew them. Seldom has a wedding in Prince Rupert created the interest and enthusiasm that was so freely exhibited on this occasion.

DAILY EDITION Monday, August 12, 1929

WELCOME TO MR. BENNETT

We are glad to extend a welcome to Hon. R. B. Bennett, leader of the Conservatives throughout the Dominion, who is making a tour of the west and who speaks here tonight. We believe this is his first visit to the city, or, at any rate, his first official visit. Many people wish to meet him and there will be a packed meeting at the theatre this evening.

Mr. Bennett is a man of outstanding ability. He has taken part in political life for many years and doubtless has a brilliant future ahead of him. We suggest, as we have suggested before, that irrespective of party lines people of the city turn out to welcome one of the country's leaders.

CLEAN UP COW BAY

Possibly there are difficulties in the way of cleaning up Cow Bay. If they are they should be publicly stated so that they may be overcome. The old cottage at the corner of Third Avenue is a menace to public safety and health and the old rotting hulks in the creek ought never to have been allowed to be placed there. The broken sewer that pours its fetid contents into the creek should be covered and a general change made in that part of the city. The Power Company is pulling down its old building and doing its part toward improvement. Now it is for all the interests concerned to do their part. This is something that must be done soon, as the present condition is a decided menace to the health and safety of the city. Also, it is something that must convey a poor impression of the city to the tourists and other visitors who enter the city that way.

SPEECH OF RICHARD GOSSE

The address of Richard Gosse of the B. C. Packers is one that is deserving of serious consideration. While we are not necessarily endorsing any of the suggestions that he made, he certainly gets at the root of the matter when he says that the annual run must be perpetuated, that the men employed should be able to make a good living in the fisheries and that capital investments should also be able to get an adequate return in the way of dividends. With all three of these requirements met, there is no reason why the salmon fisheries should not be made perpetual and be a great benefit to the district.

RADIO BROADCASTING

The All-Canadian Congress of Labor, claiming to be the largest Canadian-controlled labor organization, urges upon the Dominion Government that all broadcasting stations be owned, controlled and operated by the Dominion Government through a department of communications and the radio commission. This seems to be the most reasonable method of handling the problem and the present is the time to take it over, if it is to be done. Most of the larger stations already belong to the Canadian National Railways, so that taking them over would relieve the railway of a burden which should not be its and should give a much better service to the Canadian people.

TO FLY OVER ROAD ROUTE

Another Aerial Reconnaissance to Be Carried Out From Plane Arriving Here Today

To make a final aerial reconnaissance with W. K. Gwyer, district engineer for the provincial department of works, of possible routes for the Skeena River Highway between Galloway Rapids and Terrace, a Western Canada Airways Ltd. flying boat, piloted by W. E. Gilbert and with N. C. Terry as air engineer, arrived here shortly after noon today from Swanson Bay and tied up at the dock of the Imperial Oil Co. Weather is not very suitable this afternoon, so it is possible the road survey may not be made until tomorrow. After completing his work here, Pilot Gilbert will take the plane to Stewart for survey work and will leave there about August 20 for Queen Charlotte Islands to engage for a month in fishery patrol.

The 125-mile flight from Swanson Bay to Prince Rupert today took one hour and 25 minutes.

NO GREAT GRIEVANCE

At a Glasgow meeting the noise was terrific and triumphant discord had the upper hand. The Chairman twice essayed to speak; but in th' hubbub nobody could hear him.

When a grateful quiet reigned for a moment, he appealed for order, adding: "I can hardly hear my own voice."

Immediately, to the delight of the audience, some one shouted, "Well, you're not missing much." —Public Opinion.

News of the Mines

AROUND PRINCE RUPERT
Northern Districts Prominent in Year's Mining Figures; More Ore in Topley Richfield; Activity Around Pacific

During the year 1928, 234 mineral claims were granted in the province of British Columbia, the biggest proportion of them being in the Portland Canal district. Eleven hundred free miners' certificates were issued during the year, of which 854 were in the Omineca mining division and 548 in the Portland Canal division. In the Atlin, Stikine and Leora River divisions more placer claims were recorded than mineral claims. In the Omineca division, 1587 claims were recorded and 1312 certificates of work granted, figures in the Portland Canal division being respectively 1418 and 1395. Of all the biggest mineral producers in the province, Premier is the only one where ore reserves are strictly limited, though it is estimated that it still has enough ore in sight to carry on at the present rate of production for two or three years more. Three mines produced 99 per cent of the copper output of the province last year—Copper Mountain, Britannia and Hidden Creek.

Ore has now been opened on No. 2 level at the Topley Richfield mine for a distance of 200 feet north and 40 feet south of the shaft. Assays of eighteen samples taken in the south drift show average values of .35 ounces gold and 18.3 ounces of silver to the ton, or a combined value of $17.25 per ton without considering the base metal values. It is anticipated that the diamond drilling program now under way on Topley Richfield will be productive of highly important discoveries within the next few weeks and will enable the management to ascertain the type and capacity of the mill to be constructed on the property.

British Columbia produced just about half of Canada's total silver production in 1928, which was 21,936,407 fine ounces valued at $12,761,725. Of this British Columbia turned out 10,943,367 ounces, the Sullivan mine in the Kimberley district and the Premier on Portland Canal being responsible for the greater part of the province's output. Silver was also recovered from copper ores which were treated at Trail and Granby smelters.

Stockholders of the Granby Consolidated Mining, Smelting & Power Co. decided at a special meeting recently to increase the reserve fund for depletion and depreciation by $2,367,738 by appropriating from excess current assets. It was also decided to make further proportionate distribution to shareholders from this reserve as return of capital stock from time to time as is seen fit up to the amount just appropriated, plus residue of previous appropriation.

There is much doing in the way of mining around Pacific. Up Legate Creek the Consolidated Mining & Smelting Co. has been developing mineral claims and, so successful have the results been, that now the company has control of four groups on the same mountain and has established four camps for four separate gangs of workmen. The four groups are the E. & M., E. & K., Frisco and Zonamay. Considerable trail improvements have been made to the properties which it will now be possible to work all the year around.

PHILOSOPHY & RELATIVITY

The late Chauncey M. Depew used to poke a good deal of fun at philosophy, relativity and other high-brow subjects. "Philosophy," he once said, "has been likened to a blind man searching in a dark room in the night for a black hat that isn't there." "But relativity?" "Relativity is like the dialogue of Pat and Mike. "Can I know what I don't know?" says Mike. "No," says Pat. "Well, now, there's a certain thing I don't know, and I know it. Then don't I know what I don't know?" "I don't know."—Montreal Star.

THE GREEN SHADOW

by HERMAN LANDON

INSTALLMENT NINETEEN

The String of Pearls

The little breach in the wood panelling, noted and filed away in his mind the night before, had played on his imagination in the interim, looming with greater and greater suggestiveness. A hiding place for articles of a very private nature, perhaps? That had been his first thought upon noticing the irregularity. But he had not expected to find anything like this. An even bolder hope had electrified his fingers as he inserted them into the hidden recess. It was exactly the kind of recess to which Dr. Moffett, who with Axelson's connivance appeared to take surreptitious use of the house, would confide papers of a secret and highly important character. They would have been safer there than in a place subject to possible search-warrant and raid, not to mention the contrivances of safe blowers.

The Picaroon's imagination had played extravagantly with the idea. If such were the case—if the flaw in the woodwork indicated a secret receptacle for documents used by Doctor Moffett in his wicked enterprises—why might it not contain the very papers he had offered to sell to Mr. Castle for $100,000? What a stroke of luck it would have been! What a blow to Dr. Moffett!

But instead he had found this. Already the Picaroon's first sense of elation was yielding to a feeling of disappointment. This rope of pearls, exquisite and superb though it was, would not solve the problem pressing on Adele Castle's young heart. Aside from its esthetic merits, duly appreciated by the Picaroon, its value was a purely pecuniary one. It might be worth $100,000, perhaps even more—

The Picaroon drew himself up, momentarily forgetting the stoop that went with his assumed role. A thought burned brightly, exhilaratingly in his brain. Whatever the exact value of the pearls, it equaled or exceeded the price Dr. Moffett had demanded for the papers. With the pearls in his possession, the Picaroon would be in a position to negotiate terms with the wily doctor.

With an elated chuckle he dropped the pearls into his pocket. Now he reached for a case in his pocket, and from it he removed a small card with an engraved inscription. It read:

I trust you will pardon my little joke and excuse the liberties I have taken with your valuables. They will be returned to you as soon as you shall have donated 10 per cent of their value to the Society for the Protection of Animals.

THE PICAROON.

He gazed doubtfully at the card. A similar card was always found on the scene of each of his enterprises, and he had never failed to make good the promise toward the end, but that promise did not apply here. Doctor Moffett should not get his pearls back on such easy terms. Yet it was a matter of principle as well as ethics with the Picaroon to leave such a card behind him. It served as a taunt to the police who had once cruelly wronged him, and it safe-guarded innocent persons against unjust suspicion.

After brief reflection he took out his pencil and in a cramped and unaccustomed hand changed the last sentence so that it read: "They will be returned to you on terms that will be communicated to you in due time."

With a chuckle he dropped the card into the recess from which he had taken the pearls. His good friend Summers would grit his teeth and mutter maledictions.

Doctor Moffett would fly into a rage. Adele Castle would give Martin Dale a heavenly smile. And that would be sufficient reward.

He started to close the aperture, and then a doubt came. Suppose the pearls were not Dr. Moffett's property? Suppose they belonged to Mr. Ferryman, the pitiful mourner in the next house?

Not for worlds would the Picaroon touch anything belonging to that gentleman. He stood in a quandary, but soon his doubt dissolved. The very nature of the hiding place in which he had found the pearls suggested secretiveness, even criminal design.

Mr. Ferryman would not have concealed them in such a place. Moreover, he would have been more likely to conceal them in the next house, where he lived, and where he could watch them closely. Besides, it was doubtful if Mr. Ferryman possessed an ornament of such great value. No, in all probability it belonged to Dr. Moffett, who in all likelihood had acquired it through some shady transaction.

It was rather droll, thought the Picaroon, as he reached out his hand to close the aperture. Dr. Moffett's silence would be purchased with his own rope of pearls. For the present the Picaroon did not think beyond that point. Somehow Adele Castle must be saved from leaping from the frying pan of blackmail into the fire of marriage to a scoundrel, but perhaps that difficulty would take care of itself.

He laughed softly, and then, with great suddenness, jerked his hand away from the opening. With the swiftness of a thought he darkened his flashlight, stood with his back to the wall, all his senses exploring the darkness. A signal of warning had come out of the stillness, but as usual the Picaroon's senses had acted in advance of his mind. As yet his brain could not grasp the elusive something that had gone like the faintest tremor through his ears.

The room was utterly still. The Picaroon thought of the pearls in his pocket and the card he had dropped into the aperture. He edged back toward the opening. Perhaps he had been mistaken. The stillness on all sides had a reassuring quality. In any event, he had left way of retreat open—the door in the rear and the window looking out upon the backyard. Besides, the Picaroon had established a reputation for his ability to wriggle out of tight corners.

Just to make sure he stepped softly to the door in the rear. His fingers closed around the knob, he pushed, and then a faint mutter fell from his lips. The door was bolted on the other side. In one direction his escape was cut off. But there were still the windows and the door leading to the front hall. Swiftly and lightly he darted to the window looking out upon the street, raised the shade a little, then drew quickly back at the sight of a face looking straight toward him.

"Trapped!" he muttered. The Picaroon cornered

It was not an unusual situation, and it had its tang and its thrills for the Picaroon, and without these life would have been a tame and dull affair. As he stood in the darkness waiting for the enemy to make the next move, there flashed through the mind recollections of exciting escapes in circumstances just as difficult as the present. His nerves tingled at a sound outside the door. Captain Summers? Doctor Moffett? Who could tell?

In a moment his question was answered. The door was thrust open, the beam from a flashlight glared in his face. Behind the flashlight he saw the stocky figure of Summers with his oversized head and his short legs, grim of face and wary of eye, the bluish gleam of an automatic pistol in his hand. And behind Summers was the tall figure of Ferryman, followed by the white-faced and grizzled Axelson. A stalwart policeman brought up the rear.

The Picaroon caught his breath. It was a formidable procession, and he knew that outside the house, at the windows and doors, were more policemen. The house was a trap, and the jaws were about to spring. It was as ticklish and baffling a plight as he had ever faced.

Summers advanced a few steps, then stopped. "The light, please, Mr. Ferryman."

Ferryman came forward, a prematurely broken figure with a stricken look in his face. His hand trembled along the woodwork. A little click sounded, and the electric lights flashed on.

"Guard the door, Carigan," Summers directed.

The policeman stood in front of the door, blockading it with his broad back and shoulders. Axelson, looking badly frightened, stood behind his master. Summers thrust the flashlight into his pocket, tightened his hold on the automatic, and regarded his captive with a gelid eye and a tight little grin. He saw a bent, weary-looking figure in drab and unprepossessing garb, one who looked quite harmless and gentle mannered, and who peered at him in a nearsighted way out of heavy, shell-rimmed glasses.

"Great get-up!" His grin broadened a little. "You're a scream in those duds. Very nifty! But I know you. You don't fool me, Mr. Martin Dale."

"Dale—Dale?" Ferryman stammered, staring at the Picaroon out of hollow, lusterless eyes. "The gentleman who called here last night was a Mr. Dale. You don't mean—"

"Same one," Summers declared. "He's changed his style, that's all. I've seen him with that face on and in those togs before."

Ferryman blinked his eyes incredulously. "But the other one was taller, and his looks—"

"Sure, I know," Summers interrupted. "But he's Martin Dale, just the same, and this time I've got him dead to rights."

"Do you know," said The Picaroon, speaking in a gentle drawl that carried no resemblance to Martin Dale's voice, "I haven't the faintest idea what you are talking about. Dead to rights? What a funny phrase!"

"You know what it means. Your game is up, Dale. You've tricked me a lot of times, and you've pulled some very fancy stunts on me, but I've got you now. I've caught you red-handed."

"Red-handed?" The Picaroon held up his gloved hands and gazed at them uncomprehendingly. "Red-handed? What a droll idea! What an exceedingly droll idea!"

"And it will get droll and droll," Captain Summers promised. He cast an oblique glance at the aperture in the wall. It was still a gaping hole, for the interruption had come just as the Picaroon had been about to close it. "Please see if the pearls are still there, Mr. Ferryman."

The Picaroon's brows went up a trifle. With a dazed air and a faltering tread, Ferryman stepped to the opening in the wall. He inserted his hand.

"They're gone!" he exclaimed. "Of course," Summers chuckled in a cocksure manner. "I expected it. That's what I meant, Dale, when I said I've caught you red-handed." He came a little closer with his automatic. "It was a plant."

In a moment the Picaroon had recovered from his surprise. Summers was gazing at him with a triumphant grin that yet had an edge of reluctance. Ferryman shook his head as if unable to credit the testimony of his eyes and ears. Axelson held his gray head low and fixed the cornered man with a crafty, faintly gloating expression.

"Plant?" The Picaroon echoed. "Really, your language is very peculiar."

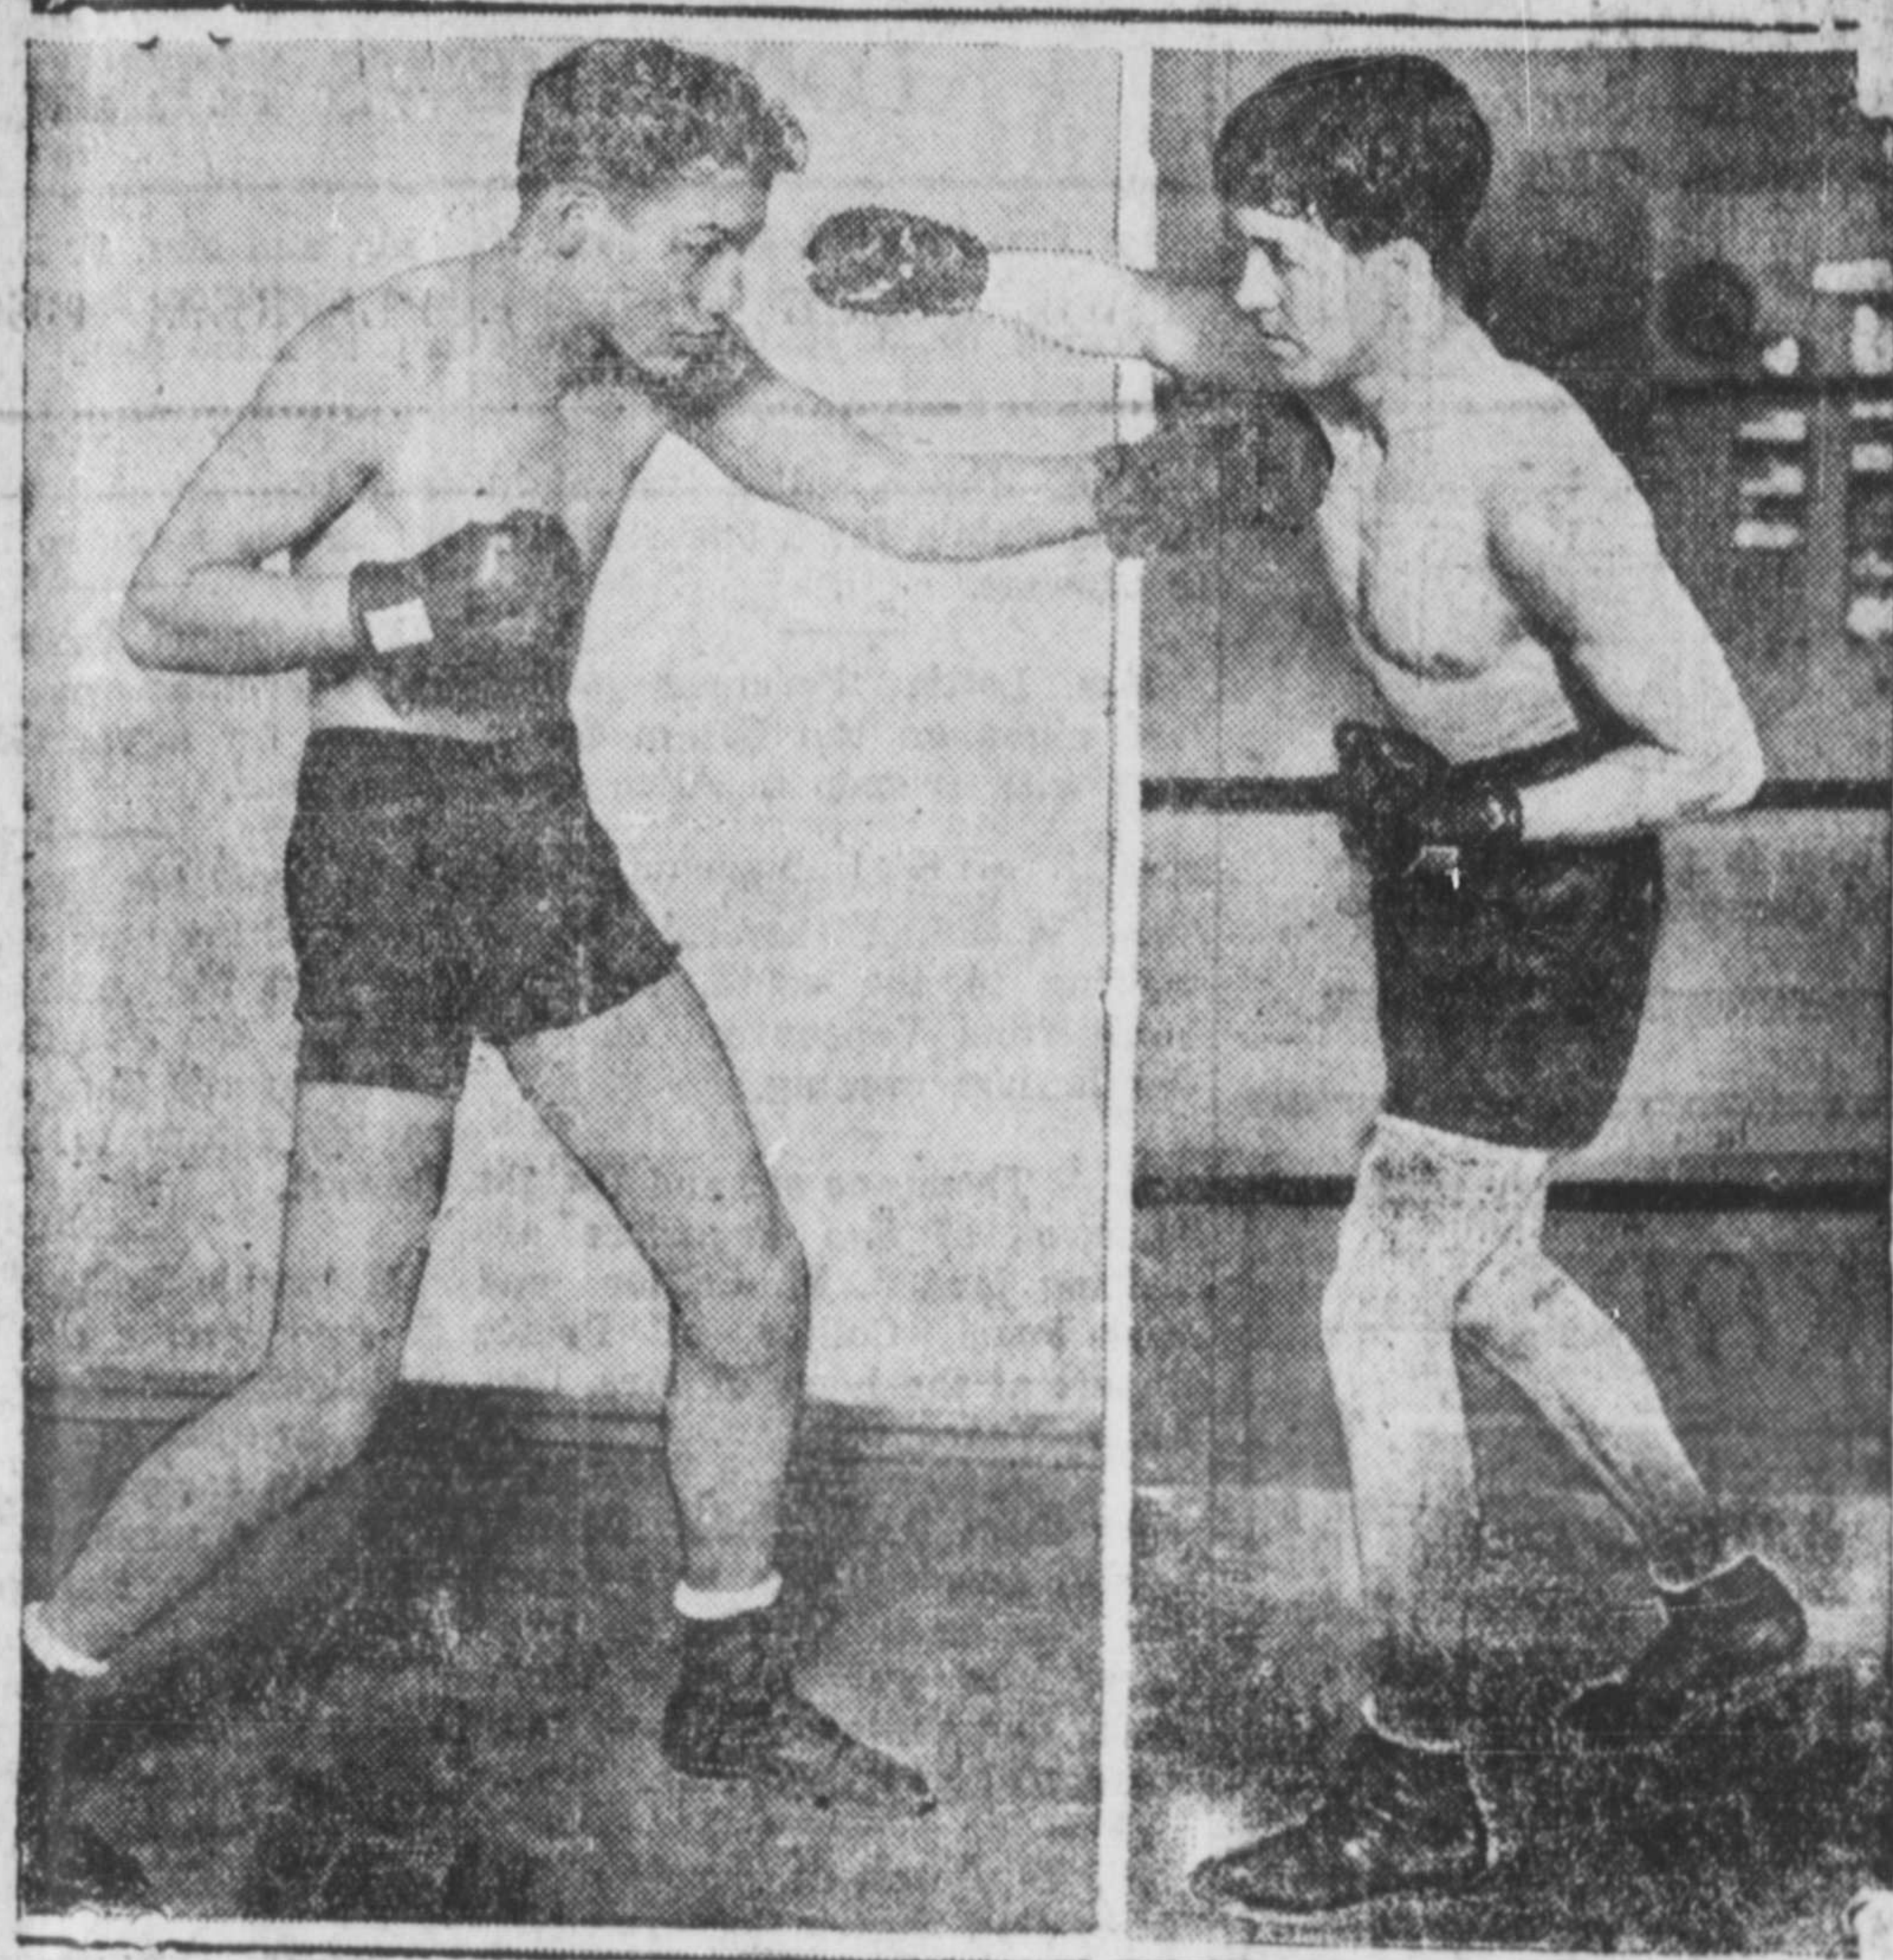

"Ob, drop the comedy," said Summers impatiently. "Please look again, Mr. Ferryman. Is there anything in that hole in the wall?"

Again Ferryman's shaking hand explored the opening. With a little start he drew it out again, exhibiting a card.

ing the sun shone forth in full radiance, flooding the cathedral with beauty as the wedding party entered to the strains of "The Bridal March From Lohengrin."

The bride, who was given away by her father, presented a picture of grace and beauty, being attired in an exquisite gown of duchess lace appliqued on crepe Elizabeth over bridal satin, with a conventional veil and orange blossoms, and carried a shower bouquet of Ophelia roses and lilies of the valley.

The bridesmaid, Miss Marjorie Roberts of Prince George, was daintily gowned in yellow radium silk lace and georgette, with large picture hat to match, and carried a shower bouquet of yellow rosebuds and white carnations.

The groom was ably supported by George Mitchell and the ushers were W. Watts, W. Mitchell and A. Mitchell.

During the signing of the register D. B. Finn rendered "The Song of Thanksgiving," and the organ pealed out "Mendelssohn's Wedding March," as the party left for the I. O. O. F. hall, where the reception was held.

The Reception

The bridal couple were assisted in receiving by the bride's mother, who wore an ensemble of liberty blue crepe Morocco with hat to match, and was assisted by Mrs. J. R. Mitchell, who was attired in black and gold brocaded georgette, also by Mrs. J. Roberts, who was gowned in beige satin with hat to match.

The hall was tastefully decorated, the predominant colors being mauve, yellow and white, a distinctive feature being the arch of foliage and flowers tastefully entwined, neath which the happy couple received the good wishes of their many friends.

The bridal table was centered with three-tier wedding cake embedded in mauve tulle and lighted with white and mauve tapers. After the serving of a buffet lunch the bride proceeded to cut the wedding cake, following which the toast to the bride was proposed by the bishop, who spoke appreciatively of the valuable services as organist of the cathedral so cheerfully given by Miss Lancaster during the past few years.

This was responded to by the bridegroom, who in a happy little speech expressed his thanks for the many good wishes.

The toast to the bridesmaid was proposed by A. J. Lancaster and responded to by J. Roberts. Congratulatory speeches were also made by Rev. J. B. Gibson and Rev. A. Wilson, who extended their good wishes for the future happiness of the newly-wedded couple.

Vocal and instrumental solos were contributed by D. B. Finn and E. Lyne.

Out-of-town visitors included Mrs. E. R. Lancaster of McBride and Mr. and Mrs. Roberts of Prince George. Numerous telegrams of congratulation were received, including a cable from London, England.

The proceedings terminated by the singing of "Auld Lang Syne."

The groom's gift to the bridesmaid was an amethyst bar pin; to the best man, a pair of cuff links.

The bride's travelling costume consisted of a charming dress of blue De Lon georgette with matching hat and navy blue coat.

A large crowd assembled at the wharf to give the newlyweds a rousing sendoff on their honeymoon trip to Vancouver and other cities in the south, raising repeated cheers as the ss. Prince George pulled out of the dock.

On their return Mr. and Mrs. Smith will take up residence at 445 5th Ave. West.

TREASURE HUNTING IN POLYNESIA IS STILL CARRIED ON

Some Islands Dug Over By Searchers or Blown Away With Dynamite

PAPEETE, Tahiti, Aug. 12.—Treasure hunting may be on the decline in more populous parts of the world but in southeastern Polynesia the mirage of buried loot ever is an attraction.

The failure of one expedition to find anything resembling the riches supposed to have been brought to these parts by free booters during the revolutions of the past century in Peru and Chile does not seem to deter the organization of a new expedition. They follow, one after another at regular intervals.

The atoll of Pinaki, in the Paumotu or Dangerous Archipelago, has been virtually honey-combed by treasure seekers. One man has lived there eight years digging the coral sand from end to end, but the millions in gold and jewelled vessels that legends had stolen from rich church treasures of Peru never have materialized.

One small island near Bora Bora was almost literally blown out of the water with dynamite planted by a yachting expedition from the United States, the grief-stricken owner of it discovered when he visited his possession after the departure of the treasure seekers.

MAN, WOMAN AND WIFE HERE TUESDAY IS THRILLING DRAMA

A remarkable study in the effect of fear upon a man and how it can change his entire life is shown in "Man, Woman and Wife," the Universal picture coming to Capitol Theatre Tuesday, with Norman Kerry as the star, supported by Pauline Starke in the leading feminine role.

It is a combination war and underworld story, showing how a haunting fear of injury can cause a man to turn yellow at crucial moments. Kerry plays the role of a young social lion who marches away to war with high hopes, leaving a beautiful bride confident in his heroic qualities. But in his breast there lurks the seed of fear and cowardice that ripens to malignant flower in the heat of battle. His actions in the face of the enemy change his entire life and send him, upon his return to America, into the underworld and down to the gutter.

How he is rescued by a former sweetheart, and how the two struggle to break the bonds of gangdom in their fight for the right to live their own lives, makes a gripping drama with suspense and deep human interest.

But most gripping of all is the culmination of this tangle of human lives and hearts in which Kerry regains his courage and overcomes his craven instincts in a situation of tragic grandeur that stamps the picture as an outstanding photo-drama.

Marian Nixon and Kenneth Harlan also are in the cast.
