Forest Activities Outlined by The District Forester Shows Some Improvement In Logging Operations

Number of Mills In Operation and Some Closed Down Owing To Lack of Demand For the Product

While the season just about ended has not been as busy as was expected, owing to the Billmor mill not operating and the curtailment of demand for lumber owing to the short crop on the prairies, there has been some activity in the Prince Rupert district and scaling figures have been quite a lot higher than for last year.

Sawmills, Coast

Conditions pertaining to sawmilling on the coast in the Prince Rupert forest district are very much the same as a year ago.

USE PLANES PREVENTION SMUGGLING

WASHINGTON, Dec. 9.—An air patrol to curb immigration smugglers and other border law breakers was recommended to Congress today by Secretary Davis; of the Labor Department.

Supporting his request for an air fleet the secretary asserted that enforcement of laws could be accomplished only through using the same or better weapons than were used by smugglers.

Three other recommendations to Congress are made in the annual report of the season as follows: Codification and consolidation of all immigration statutes now scattered in various Congressional enactments.

Construction of increased detention facilities at ports of entry to care for the greater number of aliens held there.

Modification of the law which forever bars aliens once departed so as to permit them to re-apply if permission were given by the Secretary of Labor.

Prince Rupert Is Now Centre of Activities For Consolidated in North B. C. and Alaska Territory

The important Consolidated Mining & Smelting Co. has recognized the advantages and strategic position of this city as the centre of the immense mining field of Northern and Central British Columbia and Alaska by establishing in Prince Rupert its headquarters for field examination and mineral assaying work.

It was in February last that Smelters established its district headquarters here and, since that time, an immense activity has developed.

The chief Consolidated official located here is D. C. McKechnie, chief field engineer, who has as his assisting engineers E. L. Bowler and W. F. Castle. G. W. Dunn is assayer in charge, his assistants being Jack Shore, Clare Donaldson and A. C. Mattingly.

The assay department is fully equipped in all modern devices for the testing of mineral. While gold, silver, copper, lead and zinc are specialized in other such minerals as nickel, platinum, etc., can be handled here. There are four furnaces in the assay office and the usual laboratory. Electrolytic machinery and minute balances are among the interesting pieces of equipment to be seen in the shop.

Local Smelters workers are winding up what has been for them a very busy season. Even greater activity is anticipated next year. The field staff will have a rather quiet time during the coming winter months and some of its members will take advantage of the opportunity to have their vacations. The assay staff will continue its work throughout the winter.

Don't Trifle with Bronchitis

There are few "colds in the head" that do not extend into the bronchial tubes and they often develop into bronchial congestion or bronchitis. Many cases become serious and last for weeks and there is always a tendency for bronchitis to become chronic and return again and again. For this reason you cannot afford to neglect any cold and should take quick action at the first indication that the cold is entering the bronchial tubes. Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine is at once the most prompt and most effective treatment you can secure. Dr. Chase's Syrup has long since proven its exceptional medicinal value and should not be confused with ordinary cough mixtures.

Frances shook her head. What impulse possessed her she never knew, then or at any future time. She touched the spring which released the blind and stood at the window, and almost as she did so, the tall form came stumbling by, paused at the unexpected flash of light which streamed out across the pavement and stared in. Miss Brown's little cry was half of terror, half of frank amazement. It was Paul who stood there, supporting himself with his left hand against the wall, his dinner coat buttoned up to the throat, one side of his face covered with blood, hatless, and with a glare in his eyes almost of savagery. He stood swaying a little on his feet, speechless. The clamor of voices behind seemed to grow nearer. His pursuers were evidently turning into the alley. Miss Brown tapped at the window and threw it open a few inches. "Wait a minute," she called out, "I shall let you in."

Three of them were in evening dress, and one of them, whose finger was still pressing the bell, seemed to her, with his pointed black beard and hollow complexion, vaguely familiar. He was wearing a silk hat and a long coat with an astrakhan collar turned up. At the sound of the opening of the window he raised his head, and Miss Brown immediately recognized him. It was Malakoff. "What do you want?" Miss Brown demanded. "I want the man whom you let into this house just now," was the prompt reply. "Why?" There was a confused murmur of voices. The faces of all five men were upturned, and Miss Brown was thankful for the obscurity in which she stood. "He's murdered a man in Clarges Street," Malakoff declared. "You're not the police," Miss Brown rejoined. "One of the men, who was swinging a short, heavy stick, pushed his way into the middle of the pavement. "Look here," he called out, "the police can deal with this later on. We want that man and we're going to have him. We're coming through your window down here if you don't open the door."

and then I passed your window," Miss Brown, very practical, was thinking hard. "Do you think you killed him?" she asked. "No," Paul answered, "I am afraid not. Two of them carried him back into the house. He was groaning, but he was alive. No, I did not kill him. I broke his arm, I think, and perhaps his leg, but I do not think that he is dead. I had not time." He began to mumble incoherently. Frances fetched water and towels and together the two girls bound up his wounds. He had fallen into a semicomatose state, half asleep and half unconscious. "Perhaps you'll tell me now," Frances demanded, when they had placed a pillow under his head, "exactly what you are going to do about this young man?" "We are going to sleep in our dressing gowns," Miss Brown suggested, "and he can stay where he is. There is nothing else for it. We can't turn him out into the streets. "I should think not, indeed! I wonder if he's quite comfortable." Frances rested her hand gently upon his forehead, adjusted a bandage and moved the pillow a little. Reassured by his regular breathing, she presently slipped off the remainder of her clothes and wrapped herself in her dressing gown, an example which Miss Brown, after a moment's hesitation and with more circumspection, followed. Once more they turned out the light. Paul, stretched at full length, seemed huge almost colossal, in the gloom of the room. The Guest Leaves Miss Brown opened her eyes in broad daylight and lay quite still for several seconds struggling with a confused haze of recollections. Suddenly she remembered everything and pulled the somewhat disordered bed-clothes up to her chin. Furtively she turned her head toward the hearthrug. The pillow was still in its place, but there was no sign of Paul. Frances, with her long arms thrown wide on either side, was sleeping peacefully. Miss Brown sat up in bed and looked timidly around the room. Pinned to the corner of her pillow was a roughly scrawled note which she hastily read: "I am so sorry. I am quite well and I have gone. I hope I shall not wake either of you. You probably saved my life. How shall I speak of my gratitude?" PAUL. Miss Brown swung herself out of bed, started the geyser going in the bathroom, filled the kettle and lit the stove. Then she selected her clothes for the morning. Presently Frances opened her eyes lazily and looked around her. "Where's our escort?" she demanded. "Stolen away," Miss Brown replied, "left a note—a P. P. C. pinned to my pillow. There it is on the table." Frances sat up and clasped her knees. "Pinned to your pillow!" she exclaimed. "As a prude of the first water, Miss Brown, I should think that the memory of last night, or rather this morning, will haunt you to your dying day." "It didn't keep me awake, at any rate," was the equable reply. "Do you mind if I have my bath first? I have to be down in Whitehall at half-past nine." Frances yawned. "I shan't go down until the 10:40," she announced. "You seem to treat last night's little affair very lightly, Edith. Is that sort of thing happening to you all the time? If so I'm a permanent here, even if you have to feed me. I like the stir of it." Miss Brown vouchsafed no reply. She took her bath, dressed with her usual simplicity, but with the same scrupulous care of detail, slipped out and bought some rolls from the baker's shop, a pat of butter from the grocer's next door and a morning paper, which she scrutinized closely over her breakfast. There were still columns about the South Audley Street outrage, and an announcement of the fact that the police were in possession of the premises from which the bombs had been traced and had seized sufficient explosives to blow up half London. As regarded any possible arrests, the police were uncommunicative, but great unsettlement was reported to exist

terior and on the coast is as described in our report of last year. Sales of Crown Timber It is expected that the sales of crown timber will approximately equal those of last year in number of sales and value. We can expect a decrease in sales for railway ties, but that will be counter-balanced by the increase for sawlogs on the coast and for cedar poles. Special Investigation and Studies An extensive reconnaissance was made in the summer of 1929 to obtain general information concerning forest resources in areas in the headwaters of the Skeema and Kispico Rivers and in the vicinity of Bear Lake. A complete report is not yet to hand but it should be available shortly.

MARTYRS TO BE HONORED

Catholics Who Died For Faith in England to Be Beatified By Church VATICAN CITY, Dec. 9.—Over two hundred English Catholics, priests and laymen, martyred for their faith in the period between 1534 and 1679, will be solemnly beatified in St. Peter's basilica with imposing ceremonies some time during December. In another ceremony of the same sort, the Rev. Father Ogilvie, Scottish Jesuit who suffered martyrdom during the same time, will be similarly honored.

Fire Season The fire season in 1929 was attended with an early dangerous hazard opening the latter part of April and continuing through May and the early part of June. From that time the fire hazard was never great for any lengthy period, intermittent showery weather and periods of high humidity making it possible to control the situation with negligible cost and damage since June 15. A total of 159 fires occurred in the Prince Rupert forest district in 1929, on which the forest branch spent approximately $6900 in suppression measures. Other parties, chiefly the Canadian National Railways, spent $573.48 in fighting forest fires in this district. A total of 5700 acres were burned over, causing damage estimated at $12,360. Only 158 acres of merchantable timber were destroyed with a net stumpage loss of $553.00. The value of forest products, buildings, and other forms of property destroyed by these fires amounted to approximately $6000. The causes of the majority of fires were attributed to campers, travellers, smokers and land clearing operations. 47.7 miles of fire trails and trenches were built in combating forest fires in 1929.

Visited Carmel In California

Mr. and Mrs. Brooksbank Met E. A. Wakefield, Former Consul at Prince Rupert

Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Brooksbank while in California recently visited Carmel and were photographed in front of Aimee Macpherson's famous cottage. Carmel is the place where exclusive people go. It is situated on a lovely bay 150 miles south of San Francisco and few of the people Mr. Brooksbank met even knew where the Macpherson cottage was. Prices of commodities were high and everything indicated wealth.

Another place visited was Santa Cruz. This was just the opposite to Carmel. It is the popular place and is much more crowded.

The Brooksbanks spent ten days at Palo Alto where Mrs. Brooksbank's sister lives in order that the boys may attend the university. They travelled south mostly by stage and came back on the steamer Emma Alexander.

On the same steamer coming north was E. A. Wakefield, former American Consul here who was on his way to settle up some business at Seattle and Portland before leaving Ensenada for New Orleans, Cuba by way of New Orleans.

Silver Cup Mine Closes Down; Courses In Mineralogy at Smithers; Telkwa Collieries Close

With only a few men now remaining on the staff to run ore through the concentrator, operations at the Silver Cup mine, near Hazelton, are about to be closed down for the winter. The Silver Cup Mining Co. is about to undergo reorganization and it is expected the property will resume operations next year under new management. For some months W. B. Dornberg has been unable to look after the property owing to illness. The first work when operations are resumed will probably be the blocking out of further ore reserves so that the concentration mill can be kept going to capacity. While there seems to be some difference of opinion on the matter, it is felt by some that the Silver Cup may yet prove a profit-maker for the stockholders. Comparatively little ore has been taken out, something like fifteen carloads of concentrates having been shipped to smelter since the mill opened, and the plant at the mine and the concentrator are said to be in excellent condition. During the shutdown road improvements will be made and efforts will be made to reduce the cost of transportation of the ore. A long tramline may be installed.

The Omineca branch of the British Columbia Chamber of Mines is negotiating with officials of the provincial mines department with a view to having a course of instruction in elementary mineralogy given in Smithers during the coming winter. It is possible that a course of twenty lectures, one per day, may be arranged for. It will be the first time that any course like this has been given in the central interior and it is believed that a considerable number will take advantage of it. The annual general meeting of the Smithers chamber will be held on December 27, when reports of the past year's activities will be presented and officers for 1930 elected. Douglas Lay, resident mining engineer for the northern mineral survey district, is being asked to attend and address the meeting.

With all bunkers at the railway filled to capacity in the face of a shortage of orders, operations at the Telkwa Collieries have been temporarily suspended. Seasonable weather is expected to bring an early resumption of mining with the prospect of steady operation during the remainder of the winter months. The famous Babine Bonanza mine, north of Smithers, which is now under development by the Babine Bonanza Metals, Ltd., of which company Grant Mahood is the organizer, continues to draw much attention and comment of promise. W. F. Irwin & Co., of Vancouver, has undertaken to underwrite the unissued stock and, during the past week, Mr. Irwin, president of that company, paid a visit to the property. Machinery is to be taken in over the winter road and production is in sight for next winter.

PEACE RIVER LAND

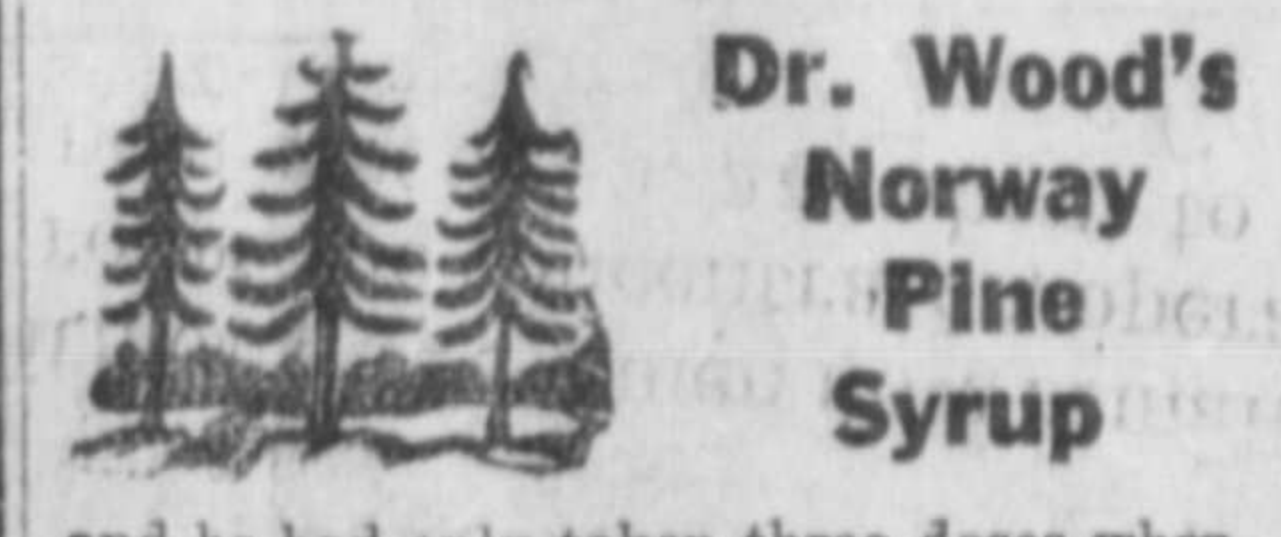

There's a land of great promise where Peace winds its way. Where the settlers are few on its acres so long. And they hope that the railroad soon from there will straggle to where in the westward the sea sings its song. Those people so hardy though, hear with regret As those who have power wear their heads with a frown. And say, "There is not enough business there yet. All its traffic must run still to Edmonton town."

But the wind it has whispered ere many moons wane. Thru the western hills passes a moloch will tread. And in scorching his silence and leaving his train Or the riband that murmurs in equal parts spread. That land of great promise will reap its reward— An empire that boasts of the wheat that it grows— In form of the folk, by the incoming horde. As they rush for the deals on their homesteads to close. THOS. E. BIDDLECOMBE.

Her Little Boy Had Severe Cold and Croupy Cough

Mrs. Henry E. Lyman, West River, N.B., writes: "My little boy caught a very severe cold, and had a croupy cough. I tried several medicines, but he got no relief from them. I was advised to try

Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup and he had only taken three doses when he got relief, and before he had finished the bottle he was all rid of his cough. I would not be without it in the house as it is a wonderful cough medicine. Price, 35c a bottle; large family size 60c; at all druggists and dealers; manufactured only by The T. Holds Sale at Metlakatla METLAKATLA, Dec. 9:—The Metlakatla Corps of the Salvation Army held their annual "Home League" sale in the Salvation Army Hall, and it was a very successful affair. The splendid sum of $36.90 was realized by the auction of various articles; foodstuffs donated for the occasion as also the plain and fancy needle-work and home cooking of the Home League. Chief Councillor Leask made a very capable auctioneer, and he also presided as chairman of a "short program" rendered preceding the sale. One of the items by S. A. Songsters from "Musical Salvationist" was very acceptably rendered, as also was a monologue by "Navy Clifton, a vocal solo by Mrs. Clifton and a humorous monologue by Sergeant Major Prevost.
