Senate Livens Up

THERE has long been an inclination on the part of many people to regard the House of Commons as the sole activating factor behind the government of Canada and the Senate as no more than an amiable meeting place of elderly men. However, of late there seems to have been developing in the august upper chamber a new spirit of more active life. This is an encouraging sign but it is long overdue. British Columbia's Financial and Industrial Times points out that the Senate is under no compulsion to do anything beyond receiving and approving the legislation that comes to it from the lower house. It has the security of a place in the constitution and legal authorities have come to the conclusion it can never be extinguished by a hostile government appointing a majority of new senators who would be prepared to vote the Senate out of existence. It could be eliminated from the scene only by a long-drawn-out uprising of public sentiment against it and far-reaching, and slow-coming, changes in the conception of government in Canada. The Red Chamber is not even under the pressure of a formidable opposition within its own walls. Only a corporal's guard of Progressive Conservative senators remains; Liberal government have been in power since 1935, and for years before 1930, and the men they appointed to the upper house were Liberal stalwarts. The Senate, predominantly Liberal, now assumes a non-partisan air with Senator John T. Haig, Opposition leader, finding friends among the Liberals for some of his criticisms. Redoubtable personalities like Senator Tom Reid of British Columbia' and Senator Tom Crerar of Manitoba scan the estimates and express their opinions with a fire that must make the government wince.

by Elmore Philpott 400 MILLION-MINUS 1 NEW DELHI, India.--As in Pakistan, so in India they are taking a census of the population. But I want to warn you right now, you will have to deduct one visiting Canuck if you want to get the proper total. A gravefaced young civil servant visited me in my hotel room. He was from the census bureau. I was to answer certain questions. I told him I had just arrived from Canada and that I would be here less than two months. But I might as well have addressed a stone wall. He took my name, my father's name, my birthplace, age, religion, nationality and other particulars, such as number of children. Only after he had finished his job would he break down and relax a bit. But he saw a whole raft of Pakistan publicity material on my desk, including a cleverly-written booklet on the Kashmir ques-It turned out he was from

The Senate, however, has come to concern itself with much more than protection of the public purse. Its increased interest in foreign affairs has resulted in able discussions of matters now before the United Nations, helped by the knowledge of members like Senator Gray Turgeon of British Columbia who has been a Canadian representative on UN groups. In the Senate is the wisdom of many men with long experience in the business of government. Canada will benefit from their energy and their industry and be pleasantly reminded that the last word is not necessarily spoken when the Commoners have had their say. I WAS SURPRISED to learn that census-taking is an extra and unpaid job for civil workers, who do their regular work in daytime and their census-taking in off-hours. But a rather cynical European explained this policy as follows:

"They could not pay these people so much a name, as we do in western countries in census. If they did, the censustakers would pad the rolls with all sorts of phony names."
