The car used was not a new unit, but had already travelled over 11,000 miles before the test was made and was standard in every way. no special equipment of any kind being used.

Twenty-five different drivers, under the jurisdiction of a checker from the Contest Board of the Manitoba Motor League, piloted the car through the most diversified road and weather conditions that could possibly be experienced. A lot of the territory covered was very hilly, practically all of it being over loosely gravelled roads, which are not conducive to the most economical operation.

The drivers experienced rain, fog and snow, and unfortunately. for by far the greater period of the test, strong head winds were encountered. On two particular days these winds could be classed as Temperatures ranged from 70 degrees above zero to six degrees below freezing, and during the whole test only one day could really be termed a favorable one for an economy test run.
