Scenes After Bombardment and Capture of Shanhaikwan

Japan seized Shanhaikwan, railway gate to the north of China, in January this year. (1) This old Chinese tower received the special attention of Japanese artillery and infantry in the fighting which resulted in occupation. Japanese soldiers are shown on the base of the shattered masonry. (2) Japanose soldiers wounded in the battle which resulted in the occupation are shown being placed aboard a military train to be taken back to the hospital at Chinchow, headquarters in Manchuria of the Japanese eighth division.

Tells About Russia Today

Dr. Durant Gives Interesting Lecture in Vancouver as Result of First-Hand Knowledge

VANCOUVER, Feb. 7-"If I could have come back from Russia and told the American people that it was a paradise I would have been the idol of every woman's club in the country, and should have had vast audiences everywhere. Hindus himself told me that there is hardly a city in American which would not welcome the story of Soviet success rather than the story of misery, despotism and sadness that exists there."

This was one of a number of statements at the commencement of Dr. Will Durant's address on "Russia As I Saw It," at the Vancouver Theatre, which aroused a small section of the audience to pronounced opposition, and heckling. That audience, over which R. J. Cromie presided, filled every seat in the house.

It was while the lecturer (whose wife is a Russian immigrant) was describing the tragedy of starvation, poverty and misery which he and his wife found when they visited the first considerable Russian city, Omsk, that the interruptions from the gallery became so vocal that Dr. Durant, during a momentary silence, said:

"I had presumed when I came! here that Vancouver was a city traditions of courtesy to a speaker.
