GRAIN MOVEMENT HERE SPEEDING UP

BLASTING OF JUNEAU WATER MAIN DESCRIBED SABOTAGE

Full Wheat Trains Starting To Roll To Prince Rupert; Pool To Bring In Over Million Bushels

Traffic Beginning to Move Considerably Earlier Than Usual—No Information Available Locally as to Change of Policy Regarding This Port

Following decision of the Alberta Wheat Pool to fill the Prince Rupert elevator with grain this fall, movement of wheat from the prairies to this terminal is now beginning to become much freer and trainload lots are starting to roll in. The first full trainload of the season reached here on Tuesday night and another came in last night. Some of the grain is last year's crop and some this year's. It is coming from various points on the prairies.

In the past it has not been customary to start moving grain into Prince Rupert before October or November. Whether or not the earlier movement of grain this year is to be taken as an indication of change of policy with respect to the use of the Prince Rupert elevator by the Wheat Pool cannot be learned locally. There is no word here as to what the Pool's intentions may be in regard to exports through the port this winter. In the meantime, it is a matter of considerable gratification in local shipping circles that the inward movement of grain is to be speeded up considerably.

In addition to bringing in the wheat on the regular mixed trains, it is understood that at least two or three full trains will be brought in weekly from now on until the house is filled to its capacity of 1,250,000 bushels. Each full wheat train consists of some thirty or forty cars depending upon the size of the cars.

It had been originally intimated that only 500,000 bushels, or less than half of the elevator's capacity, would be moved to Prince Rupert from the prairies at this time and that the movement would be handled by the regular mixed trains without full grain trains.

The inauguration of trainload shipments of grain will involve the putting on of extra train crews and the providing of work for additional trainmen on this division.

SEES REAL EMERGENCY

Pastor Critical of Cutting Down of Educational Facilities Here

Backward Step

Debt to Children More Important Than to Bondholders

The regular monthly meeting of the Prince Rupert Parent-Teachers' Association was held last evening in the Borden Street School. The president, Mrs. H. B. Eastman, presided over a large attendance of members.

After the usual business meeting, Rev. W. D. Grant, Hollingworth, pastor of First Presbyterian Church, gave a very forceful and interesting educational address on the subject of "Our Constant Emergency." In the past few years many words rarely heard heretofore—words such as depression, crash, crisis, emergency and the like—had been brought into common use. This age was one of changing attitudes and values and problems, many and varied, were claiming attention. No greater problem appeared to be occupying the minds of the people than the attempt to bring back what they liked to call the "good times." Remedies of all descriptions had been tried and even the most desperate remedy, that of N. R. A. in the United States, seemed like all the others to be found wanting.

But with all these attempts there had been a definite neglect, nay, almost a shameful disregard, of one of the greatest emergencies—that of developing youth. Society would be compelled to pay dearly for this neglect of its young people.

There were some things that could not wait indefinitely for a remedy. Youth could not wait. Boys who were 16 when the crash came were now young men of 20. Children had grown to adolescence and boys and girls to manhood and womanhood. If there was such a thing in the world as an emergency it was the situation presented by a child. The things that could be done for him only while he is a child, much be done promptly or forever remain undone. If they remained undone the loss was not the child's only but it was also that of the whole society of which he formed a part. When anything was done to prevent the development of a child into an intelligent citizen, the loss to the child was great, but the loss to the community even infinitely greater.

In Prince Rupert

People talked a great deal in Prince Rupert about developing the community and concerned themselves with hazy improbabilities, yet they stood idly by and allowed the most potent latent possibilities in their very midst—the developing lives of the children—to be disregarded.

There were two chief institutions which deal with the child—the home and the school. With the parents in the home lay the privilege and responsibility of inculcating into the mind of the child those

Residences and Stores In Alaska Capital In Danger of Vandalism

Thirty-Inch Pipe, Which Was Dynamited, Supplied City's High Pressure Fire Protection System as Well as Alaska-Juneau Mine Concentrator

JUNEAU, Alaska, Sept. 21: (CP)—Dynamiting on Tuesday night of a thirty-inch water supply main for the city's high pressure fire mains and the Alaska-Juneau Gold Mining Co.'s concentrating mill was described yesterday by the authorities as an act of sabotage. The main was only partially destroyed, endangering for a while some of the residences and business houses in the lower part of the city through which it passes.

Railway Union Executive Pays Visit to City

James H. Cassell of Cleveland, O., general secretary-treasurer of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers and one of the most prominent railway union executives in the United States, was an interesting visitor in Prince Rupert yesterday in the course of a trip to the Pacific Coast. Accompanied by Mrs. Cassell, he arrived on the steamer Prince George in the morning from Vancouver and proceeded east on last night's train.

During his stay here, Mr. Cassell met and lunched with City Commissioner W. J. Alder. He and Mrs. Cassell also paid a visit to the plant of the Canadian Fish & Cold Storage Co. and found their stay here most interesting.

high ideals of Christian living which could and should motivate all behavior. It had been said that, unless a man's heart be right, the more he knew the worse for him and all mankind. Nothing was so tragic and so harmful to the child's development as to be exposed constantly to the influence of a tawdry, vulgar, demoralizing home environment. On the other hand if the child was brought up in a simple way, with a few desires, and a hatred of sham and pretence, in an environment which, though humble, was refined, and where the parents loved one another with honest, constant love, he would be given contentment and a rich store of spiritual wealth which would mould his thoughts and actions throughout his whole life.

The other institution which had to do with the child was the school. As a minister of the Christian Church, Mr. Hollingworth stressed the fact that he was intensely interested in the school as well as in the home. Within the walls of the school the growing lives of the church spent much more time than they did in the church. In the school they really learned to live by living.

The function of the school had changed from the days of the little red school house which so many people associated with their childhood. But the purpose of education had always been the same. It was still life. It was still to give the child what he needed or would need to know in order to develop into a well-rounded, happy, efficient citizen. But the methods of this education were bound to change in keeping with the society in which it existed. The thing people could not possibly do was to try to make education in society today fit the methods of the past.

It was all very well when life was essentially simple to see that every child was given an equal start by furnishing him with certain fundamentals of learning, and then letting him do the rest. In those days higher schools of learning were thought of as strictly professional schools where ministers, lawyers, doctors and teachers learned the technical facts they needed for the pursuit of their vocations. The child went to school to learn to read, to write, to figure. His life outside school gave him the rest of the training he needed.

Life Has Changed
Life had changed since then. Industrialization brought the large city and it also brought the auto, the talkies, the radio, with their enormous influences—making even the small child much more part of the world than had ever been dreamed of in the past. The result of these social changes had been an increase in the number of subjects taught in the schools and a change in the forms and methods of teaching. Just as society could not go back from the point of view of knowledge, so many of these subjects which some were inclined to call "frills" must remain if people were to fit their children for an intelligent citizenship. And yet this was precisely what those in charge of educational affairs in Prince Rupert are seeking to do. There was a general tendency to eliminate socially valuable and even essential features of educational work. "Away with the fads and the frills. Back to the 3 R's," they cried. It sounded simple.

Elderly people who had lived all their lives in a small town or in a restricted society—who received their education in a simple society—and most especially elderly people who had a great deal of taxable property and whose children were grown up—were easily persuaded to classify as fads and frills every form of educational activity that had been introduced since their own school days. Such a policy of retrenchment was fatal to the youth of today. The steps that had been taken in the past few months as part of the educational policy of this community could but be regarded as a backward step and the ones who were to suffer were the children just now but the community would suffer for years to come. People might talk about paying debts—paying what they owed—but they owed more to the children of Prince Rupert than to bondholders or to anyone else. Present arrangements meant that they were not beginning to realize their debt to the youth of the community.

"It is my contention," stated Mr. Hollingworth, "that the maintenance of the educational process, unimpaired in all its essential activities constitutes an emergency of the most urgent character." Parents should seek from those who were candidates for office at the forthcoming election a very definite statement of their attitude towards the educational situation. They must realize and meet the responsibility of this constant emergency."

During the evening an enjoyable musical program was rendered. Those contributing were Mrs. E. Anderson, Mrs. G. E. Cullin, Miss C. Watson, Miss Edith Johnstone and Miss Elsie Franks. A hearty vote of thank was accorded the speaker and those who contributed to the musical program.

After the singing of the National Anthem, refreshments were served and a pleasant social hour was spent.

How to make MASHED POTATOES more delicious

Here is a recipe for glorifying the lowly potato, that is sure to meet with popularity even in the most exacting of families. You'll love the smooth texture, delicious creamy taste and snowy whiteness of mashed potatoes, with Nestlé's Evaporated Milk. The creamy consistency of the milk itself is imparted to the potatoes, giving them an unusually fine body and flavour. About four times as much milk substance can be included with Nestlé's Evaporated Milk as when market milk is used—another good way of putting more milk in food—always important where children are concerned.

Mashed Potatoes

6 Potatoes (medium size) Salt
2/3 cup Nestlé's Evaporated Milk Pepper, if desired
Boil potatoes in jackets. Remove skins and mash. Add Nestlé's Evaporated Milk. Beat until white and fluffy. Add more Nestlé's Evaporated Milk if required. Season with salt and pepper if desired. Pile lightly on a hot dish. Yield, 6 servings. Mashed potatoes prepared with Nestlé's Evaporated Milk are easily molded into potato cakes and they brown beautifully.
