SAFETY SPEED COMFORT SERVICE

The C.N.R. renders many essential services... constantly and efficiently.

The aspect of railway operation with which the general public is most familiar is, perhaps, that of passenger transportation, and undoubtedly facilities for speedy, safe and comfortable transportation, such as is provided by the Canadian railways, are of prime importance to the whole community. There are, bowever, other and equally important services rendered by railways - and by them alone. All these services blend into one complete whole, and the support which members of the public give through using the particular service or services they require, determines the extent to which the whole usefulness of a railway system can be placed at their disposal.

One service which at this time of the year invites public attention is that of carrying grain. Without adequate railway transportation the whole country would be placed under a serious handicap and millions upon millions of dollars of new wealth would be lost, for crops which could not be brought to market or to the seaboard would be of little value. This service is, of course, a seasonal one, lasting only through some months, but to perform it, tracks, engines and cars must be maintained all the year round, and on such a basis that even large crop harvests may be adequately handled. When the crop is small, the railway suffers through having less to carry - but the same necessity for it being there to provide transportation remains:

This is only one of the services which railways perform and which go directly to enriching the country and providing employment. In 1933 the C.N.R. carried over thirty-one million tons of freight. Some idea of the importance of this freight to the workers of Canada can be obtained from a glance at its nature. Over ten million tons consisted of coal and mine products . . . over three and a half million tons of forest products . . . almost a million tons of animals and animal products . . . almost a million tons of gasoline . . . and over five million tons of wheat and farm products.

In every department of service rendered by the C.N.R. there is a whole-hearted desire and effort to provide the best possible. That spirit permeates the entire system and the public can confidently use the C.N.R. feeling that complete satisfaction will be obtained.

SPORT CHAT

If you're one of those fellows who like the music of a singing reel and the feel of a sturdy line strained to the breaking point while the rod bends to the surge of a charging fish, then Tom Purdy of Liverpool Bay, N.S., has stories of interest for you. That one topped the previous world's record by 105 pounds, and Tom Purdy admits it was some fish. But he will tell you about. There's fish out in the bay two.
