Gardening In Prince Rupert

The outdoor gardens are pretty much over and there is little to be done except caring for the roots of such plants as dahlias, begonias and others that it is planned to save for next year. As long as the frost does not touch them it is all right and the frost may come tomorrow or not for a month yet. In the From Alaskameantime it is well to enjoy all the bloom that is left.

This is the month to plant tulips and other bulbs, that stand the winter. Gladiolus bulbs must dried like begonias and kept away from frost. Some gardeners plant their roses now but many will prefer to wait for spring.

Chrysanthemums that have not bloomed should be lifted and taken indoors or into a protected porch. They will bloom any time before Christmas. They make a nice showing when most other flowers have disappeared.

The fall and early spring are the times when the old fashioned geraniums are valuable for their color. They should bloom for a month or two yet.

A number of people have asked

The Gold-Banded Auratum Lily

me what will be done about rose importations this year. Frankly I do not know. It will be a matter for the horticultural society to decide. A meeting will be called for the purpose early in the new year when new officers will be elected and preparations made for the next season's work. Just now is a good time to plan. A number of people have said they would prefer to select a few good roses, buying them through local dealers or agents, but others have expressed the opinion that if this is to be a city of roses there must yet be large importations of trees at very low prices. Possibly two thousand more could be absorbed here by local growers. especially if they begin work and prepare the ground for them now. It's a good time to plan and discuss the matter with neighbors with a view to taking the best possible action in the interests of the city and of the cause of gardening.—H. F. P.
