Business Means $330,000 a Year and This Port is Already A Serious Rival—Tacoma is Now Being Made Base For Shipments Northward

SEATTLE, July 7: (CP)-Seattle port authorities fear that the diversion of Seattle's Alaska ships to Tacoma on account of the longshore strike here may mean the transfer of the fish business to Prince Rupert. The business brings yearly returns to Seattle of $330,000. It is pointed out that the fish business is largely export and handled out of the North Atlantic, being moved across the continent by rail. For this reason Prince Rupert is already a dangerous competitor and could make a successful bid for a YOUNG LAD large share of the trade now enjoyed by Seattle.

The general strike situation continues unchanged with the Alaska boats now using the port of Tacoma departure. The Northland sailed ENGLAND City Engineer and Mrs. F. N. PRINCE RUPERT'S HIGHWAY

Prince Rupert's highway is shown on the latest Imperial Oil road map as little more than a red speck. Every town and city in Canada of any importance is linked up with the highway system with the sole exception of this one. It has only a highway in embryo, just enough to be seen on the map after careful search.

Prince Rupert is, from a highway point of view, in the same class as Cedarvale. It is not as favorably situated as Usk from which point a person may drive for fifty miles or more. And yet Prince Rupert is the fifth city in the province in point of population and fourth in rank as a seaport. It is the distributing point and focal centre for the great empire of the north.

In view of the importance of Prince Rupert and its value as a trading centre and agricultural market we do not think that sufficiently strong representations have been made to the two governments, provincial and federal, to do justice to this centre in the way of highway construction. We know of no better argument than the Imperial Oil map, which shows the highway facilities of every town and city in Western Canada with a table of distances and a miniature road map of the whole of Canada.

Prince Rupert was hit very hard by the depression and many of the men prominent in Chamber of Commerce and political circles have moved away or been removed by death. The result is that there is a lack of initiative in regard to public movements in the city. We do not press for things like we did in the days when we seemed more prosperous. Now, however, we are coming back rapidly. The young men of the city are growing up and will assert themselves and take the lead in regard to matters of this

For several years past we have had no work done on the highway. Yet there were hundreds of men out of employment who had to be fed and clothed by the governments. What we want now is action in regard to this matter. We understand that the highway is one of the public works recommended by the provincial government to the government at Ottawa. Why the inaction?
