"The thing is as bad one way as the other. If we abandon the executive committee it will give rise to the idea that the only way we can do business is by having every man of the council on the job so that each man can watch Sunday night. the other."-Ald. Clayton.

Alderman Hilditch fired the last shot by remarking that he meant to take care of his friends-those who voted for him-and to have the work done in a business like manner. "Three men on a committee can do this work quite well, where nine men on the council will only waste time arguing about it and get nothing done at all."

Clearly Alderman Hilditch has studied the ways of the present PREPARING FOR city council, and then of course it is so much nicer to get any little plans done cosily in committee behind closed doors. Why even the bigger part of the council found it so over the past week end.
