Prosperity In Agriculture Essential, Says E. W. Beatty

Chairman and President, Canadian Pacific Railway

Owing to the outstanding urgency that citi- our experience with management by a company zens from coast to coast should be supplied under direct control of the Government has with all possible information on the nation's not been satisfactory. Governmental control A vital problems, and in response to a number of requests for its general publication, the address delivered by E. W. Beatty, K.C., LL.D. Chairman and President Canadian Pacific Railway, before the Toronto Canadian Club on May 20th, is herewith published.

Mr. Beatty spoke as follows:-

"In no country s there a more useful chain of societies than that of the Canadian Clubs in this Dominion. The success of democratic government depends on the efficiency of the means provided for the discussion of public affairs. Societies whose object is to encourage the discussion of public questions perform a service of great value. No one will doubt that the Canadian Clubs are the leaders in this field.

'I am becoming, against my will, and from what I hav thought to be a sense of public duty, only too regular in my appearance as a speaker in public Speaking, as I have felt I of the times. I find myself exposed to criticism which sometimes becomes acrimonious, and often misrepresents the views which I have expressed. I presume that your kind invitation, and the courteous hearing waich I know that you will give me, are but the preludes to fresh criticisms of what I say. For this reason I commence by appealing to you for careful study of what I have said on a matter of public import- still remain to be made. ance, and of some of the rejunders made by those who disagree with me.

made in this city somewhat more than a month ago, I have tried to offer a solution of a major problem facing this country. I trust that many of my hearers today have done me the honor of listening carefully to what I have said, or of studying the copies of my addresses which have been circulated, or at least the summaries which have appeared in the press. I trust also that you have read what has been said against the

"If you have you will have learned that I have protested against the continuance of a railway policy which has added three billion dollars to the obligations of this Dominion. You will have learned that this earns me the me believes that waste of public funds is a greement proper function of government, and that we should proceed to waste more billions on railway experiments. My conscience would not permit me to accept this theory even if it would make me popular with the gentleman in ques-

"You may also know that I have suggested an end of waste by a plan of operating the two great railways jointly and as efficiently and absorb? . . . Any idea that the Canadian economically as possible. In its comments on National is to be absorbed by the Canadian my last address, a prominent Western news- Pacific is not a part of my suggestion, so I need paper, which clearly does not agree with me, describes my plan in these words: 'The plan, to put it baldly, is to put the Canadian National against those of that unregarded individual, the taxpayer.' As the traditions of Canadian journalism do not permit the deliberate mis-statecriticized, nor any of my previous addresses on the subject. In all discussion of the railway problem, I have argued that the ownership of the Canadian National should remain vested in the Government, and that any savings obtained of the railways would not be the most economical method of providing railway service to the country. This extraordinary idea has been expressed recently by an officer of the National Railways. If it is correct my plan is useless. leave it to you, as ordinary men of intelligence, to pass your judgment on this point. I shall wait patiently for a retraction of what must have been an unintentional misrepresentation of what I have said in plain language.

DISCUSSION ESSENTIAL

"These two criticisms of my recent address should show how important it is that the citizens of this country should inform themselves fully of the facts of our national problems if they are to be in a position to deal wisely with should have discussion of the problems of the individual cases on their merits. Lasting nation and that it should be as public as pos- economic relief by solution of the railway probsible. If I have suggested a plan of railway lem will far outweigh its minor and passing bad management which would rob the taxpayers effects. for the benefit of the Canadian Pacific, you should know it. If I base my case on erroneous statements, you should know those facts also.

"Other critics disagree with my plan, but do they can be absorbed into other industries?" not so flagrantly misrepresent my position. Speaking in this city recently, the Minister of Railways, for whom I have much personal regard, discussed, in his usual dashing way, the railway problem. As on other occasions, he opposed unified management of the two railways, and concluded by challenging the supwhich, by inference, embody his objections. As the one who has had the privilege of presenting the plan to the Canadian people, I may be permitted to regard the invitation as extended to

"If the Minister will read my speeches on the subject with the same care which I have given to all his public statements, he will find that I have already answered the objections which he has advanced

TOO MUCH PARTIZANSHI

"Even the most good-humored controversy with the Minister of the Crown in this election year might end in making the railway problem a party issue. The railway mess has very largely resulted from too much partizanship, and I plead that, in considering what I have suggested to dea. with it, you treat the question as one transcending party boundaries.

"With this introduction I shall answer the questions which the Minister has asked. He first enquires whether the amalgamated railways are to be under private or Government control. Each is, in my plan, to remain the property of its owners; the combined system should be managed by a private company, since rates and service—as complete as needed—

"His second question asked how much saving can be made by amalgamation under present traffic conditions. I have said that it would take five years to complete bringing the railways under unified management which, not amalgamation, is what I suggest. After that, I believe that we can save $75,000,000 a year on a normal traffic volume, taking the year 1930 as a normal traffic base. The Minister in address certainly predicted a return to that level. As we have not yet even begun the process of bringing the railways under anified management, it would be useless to attenue to relate the predictable ultimate economy to present conditions. The details of the economies on which I have based the estimate are must, on questions arising out of the difficulties spread on the records of the Royal Commission, and cannot be successfully assailed. The Minister is wrong when he says that most of the possible savings have already been made. The reductions in expenses of the two systems have been ordinary savings due to reduced traffic, and economies to meet depressed business conditions. The savings by unified management

"His third question quaguires about the division of the savings to be made by amalgama-"In a series of addresses of which the last was tion." The savings made by unified management, after each property had paid its owners net earnings equal to those which would have resulted if the properties continued to be operated independently, would be divided on an agreed basis, with at least one-half going to the owners of the National Railways.

"His fourth question is: 'How much capital expenditure will be necessary to effect the physical union of the railways, such as the uniting of terminals, and how will this be raised?' Capital expenditures would be made only where adequate savings would result. These would offer a valuable temporary method of absorbing materials and labour released by unification. The method of financing these extitle of 'Public Enemy Number One.' Perhaps penditures which would not require much the member of Parliament who thus describes new money would be a part of the unification

NOT PART OF PLAN.

"The fifth question begins 'If the Canadian National is to be absorbed by the Canadian Pacific, how much of the present deficit of 50 million dollars is the Canadian Pacific ready to not answer this question.

"The sixth question enquires what guaranto saddle on this country a railway monopoly Pacific securities if the Canadian Pacific is do away with competition between rival sys managed by parties whose prime concern would brought under Government ownership. Neither be to see that Canadian Pacific interests are Government ownership of the Canadian Pacific given the consideration due to the elect as nor guarantee of its securities is a part of may plan, so I need not answer the question.

"The seventh question asks if 'In case of ment of fact as a method of controversy, I am amalgamation will the Canadian Pacific put in convinced that the writer of hese words had all its assets (such as steamships, express, not at that time read the address which he hotels and land) or only part of them'? Amalgamation is not a description of my plan. The earnings which each company would draw out of the operated property would depend upon the assets and earning power which would be put by joint operation of the railways be divided in. The less the Canadian Pacific would put fairly between their owners. If this is not a in, the less proportion of earnings they would method of obtaining relief for the taxpayers draw out. I have already stated that we would of Canada, it can only be that joint operation be prepared to put in all those assets which now form part of our transportation system, subject to such modifications as might be mutually agreed upon.

> "The eighth question is What is to be done about settlers and industries, and towns and terminals, on lines to be abandoned? Are they to be compensated? If so how much will it cost? Are they to be moved? If so, where?' The answer is that care will be used to avoid any grave hardship. Abandonments would not be considered which would deprive communities of reasonable access to transportation

"The ninth question deals with loss to those who have located at railway terminals, shops or towns. After time has permitted us to assess "It is today more than ever vital that we the true loss, compensation should be made in

'The tenth question is 'As the estimated figures, you should know it. If, on the other savings necessarily must be made out of railhand, those who criticize my plan use personal way operating and maintenance expenses, and abuse as argument, or base their criticisms on as from 60 to 65 per cent. of such expenses are intentional or unintentional misreadings of my made up of labour, what provision is proposed to provide for these displaced wage-earners until

"I have repeatedly said that the ordinary turn-over of railway labour would, in a short time, take care of most of this, even without the increase in business which the Minister foresees. If necessary, some of the savings of unified management could be devoted to compensation porters of the plan to answer twelve questions for labour displaced. The improvement in the general economic condition of the country as the result of an end of the present period of absurd waste would be a most effective method of providing for labour displaced on the railways.

WOULD STOP PAST TROUBLE.

'Ouestion eleven asks 'Should not these questions be answered, or are we to decide on amalgamation, or unification, first and get the answers, good or bad afterwards? Or are we to be stampeded into doing something anything anything - going somewhere - anywhere? Has not that been our trouble in the past?" Our trouble in the past has been pretending that it did not matter how much money Governments poured into railway experiments. Let us stop that. I have suggested a plan. Has the Minister a better one? Or is he advocating a continuation of 'going somewhere - anywhere', which means, in plain words, into national insolvency?

"The last question is 'Finally, is this the time -at the bottom (or near it) of the financial crisis-for a final decision on this very import-

Those were the years of

"I have answered the Minister's questions. I had answered them all before they were asked. Will he answer two of mine?

"Can labour, or others dependent 1. on railway operation for their existence, be assured of employment, of stability of earnings, or of their present standard of living, if the industry on which they depend is unable to earn a return on the money invested in it?

Will a country like Canada pros-- per if one of its major industries, supporting one-seventh of the population, can be kept alive only by subsidies derived in the final analysis from general taxation?

"I am charged with being an alarmist over the railway situation, and the Minister seems to feel that he is an optimist. Is this right? I say that the railways in Canada can be made to pendent on the development of that industry run with a great reduction in the cost of the which is basic in its importance to human Minister says not, but that we must wait for Western Europe; the great industrialized area is the pessimist?

"I have appealed for the tangible suggestions of others as to a railway policy for this country. The Hon. W. D. Euler displayed a willingness to discuss the problem in the light of realities. and sketched the outline of a possible alternative to my proposal. The country, I believe, the past century and a half has been largely the would like to have him pursue his exploration of the subject, and to have the benefit of his sion. I suggest to you that one of the hi vanced is that we might overcome some of our difficulties by breaking down the two railway igress must be preceded by a return of the spin systems into three units, with autonomous conin the charge of Mr. Beatty and his officers; and tees are to be given the owners of Canadian trol in different sections of Canadia. This would but apart from the practical difficulties of framing an arrangement which would permit the most economic use of existing equipment, facilities and staff, and of making a fair distribution of the financial overhead, it would seem inevitable that such a division would have a tendency to cause the diversion of traffic from existing channels, would interfere with operation of national trade policies, and would ultimately threaten the transportation set-up which the development of the country during the past half century has proceeded. If Canada is to remain one nation in an economic sense. would seem necessary that those who initiate and apply our railway policies should have more than a provincial lovalty and more than a regional responsibility.

> 'Today, however, I do not propose to deal primarily with the railway problem. I feel a certain relief. It is pleasant for once to avoid the charge that i am a representative of a greedy group of capitalists conspiring to rob the people of Canada of a priceless national possession. In addition I shall on one occasion be able to say that I spoke of something less depressing than a series of national errors which have imperilled the future of our country.

CRITICISM EXPECTED

"I do not expect that what I say today will escape criticism from those who do not agree with me, but at least I shall have the pleasure speaking in terms of optimism, for my subject today is the opportunity which lies ahead of

"It is unnecessary to review the economic history of this country in detail. You all know of the steady growth which followed the physical completion of Confederation by the construction of the original transcontinental rail way; the hectic and unnatural activity of wartime years; and the great period of expansion which followed the hesitancy of immediate post-war days.

"It is yet too soon for us to see the happen ings of the years 1925 to 1929 in true perspective, to decide how much of the growth of this country's activities in those years should be regarded as legitimate discounting of the future, and how much as unwise expansion Whatever the truth, there can be no question that the great break in the security markets of 1929 commenced a series of events which brought the economic progress of the nationindeed of the world-to a rude and sudden half.

"During the years which have followed courageous individuals have continued not merely to carry on their accustomed activities but to seek unceasingly for new outlets for their energy and skill. Too much of the national affort of the past few years, however, has been concentrated on attempts to relieve distress by measures which are, in essence, the mere dis tribution of charity; too little has been given to real consideration of what this country night do in the years to come.

TIME HERE TO ACT

"The time has come to turn our thoughts to what we in Canada can do to revive the en thusiasm and optimism which were always the distinguishing characteristics of our nationa life. I shall attempt today to describe in broad soutline the basis of my faith in this country and its future.

"We speak of the great change in the world's economic life which commenced early in the 19th century as the industrial revolution. Actually it had its origin in such an expansion of the world's arable area by discovery and settlemen, as to justify the statement that the tom of the world economic crisis: We in Canada growth of this nation in the years from Con imism is to prevail. This is a far better time the fertile plains which Confederation and the to tackle the problem than after a few more construction of the Canadian Pacific made ac real growth. Experience justifies me in say that the later period of expansion which such ceeded the War, although it was partly based on a renewal of the era of agricultural expan sion, contained too great an element of develop ment not based on such sound foundations

'It is not my intention to speak as though agriculture were the only occupation legitimate for the people of this country. Our geographic cal situation and the distribution of our natural resources make it necessary to maintain a complex economic system. The harshness of our climate, which has contributed no small benefits to our people, has imposed on us the need of maintaining certain standards of living. Our location on the northern border of the we thiest nation in the world has forced on us creation of an economic system not too muc unlike that of our neighbors, if we are to hold our place in competition with them. This cannot be a country of peasants.

"Not in Canada alone but throughout the world economic progress is essentially de-Government even in these hard times. The civilization. England and other small areas of boom to solve the problem. Who, in reality, of the Eastern United States, may appeal to us as cases of great economic advance not based on agriculture. Not a little of the progress these communities has come from their trade with great and growing communities of agriculturists in distant areas

"The economic progress of the world during result of a period of great agricultural expanotent factors in checking this progress has "The only other suggestion recently addribeen the cessation of agricultural expansion recent times. A resumption of economic or which sent settlers to occupy the unused lands

> Believing this, I feel faith in the destiny of Canada. This country, still possessing great areas of untilled fertile soil in a climate suiter for the white races, can only fail to progress i it utterly fails to realize its opportunities.

PRODUCTION OF WEALTH.

"In these days we spend too much of our ime in discussing the division of wealth and too ittle in planning to increase its production. With certain doubts as to the advisability measures now being advocated especially those which tend to increase governmental interference in business-I am willing to accept the need and the possibility of some measures intended to improve our methods distibuting wealth. It still remains a fact, however, that the production of wealth is the basic method of improving the material position of our people. Nothing is more vital to this country than that we should consider our opportunities for an increase in the primary form of wealth production-agriculture.

'Too many people speak of agriculture as though it were a dying industry which could only be maintained by recourse to elaborate plans to relieve its distress. For some years the farmers of this country have faced conditions which might well discourage them. The price of what the farmer sells has fallen faster and farther than the price of what he buys. It has taken an increasing quantity of his product to meet the cost of those services such as transportation-which he must continue to employ. The difficulty of paying his debts has increased as rapidly as the price of his products fell.

"Despite these facts I see no signs that agriculture in Canada faces final disaster. It has taken courage on the part of our farmers to continue their operations in the circumstances which have surrounded them. They have shown that courage and it will be rewarded. The capital and labor employed in the basic industry of humanity must receive rewards at least as great as those of other industries if our system of society is to continue. The correction of the conditions which oppress the farmers is today already on its way, and I believe that it will be automatic and not long delayed. "I suggest to you that the primary essential of recovery in Canada is recovery of our faith in agriculture and that the time has come for us to consider plans for the further expansion of our basic industry.

LAND SETTLEMENT NEEDED.

'The most urgent need in this country is a definite plan of land settlement. Almost alone among the nations of the temperate zones, this country still holds great areas of unused fertile soil. Although the rate of increase of the world's population seems to be slowing down, the eague of Nations economic survey for 1934 points out that world population is still in creasing, while world production of food has remained unchanged since 1929. In a world where these things are true the nation best adapted to increase its agricultural production is to-me the nation with the brightest futureand as far as I know that is Canada.

I go farther; I suggest that when we have assessed our opportunity to increase the agricultural production of this country, we should renew our effort to attract to this country those migrants fitted to aid in its development. Let me put it this way. Of the unemployed in Canada only a percentage can be considered as suitable to become farmers. The majority are people of the cities, many unfitted to share successfully in a 'back-to-the-land' movement. All those unemployed workers in Canada who uld conceivably become successful agriculturists should be encouraged and aided revolution was agricultural. It is not neces efforts to establish themselves on the soil. When race, by experience, and by the possession of a seller modest amount of capital, seem adapted to superses al settlers in Canada.

Remember that a new farm means employ ment for at least one more family of city work ers. Could we place a hundre thousand more farmers on the land in Canada, I believe that we should provide employment to absorb the idle of our urban centres, and business enough to justify the existence of a properly outor ated transportation system, including all useful portions of the present systems thing less than this will set this country for ward again on the path of progress.

CANADA DEBTOR NATION.

I have said that there is no over-production foodstuffs in the world at large. We anada produce more of certain foodstuffs than we consume. This is a debtor nation, however, and bound by this fact to produce for export and our farms will still be the great source production for export. While many of our manufacturing industries have won a place. the markets of the world, competition in the field is most acute. There are some raw semi-manufactured materials which we can produce and sell abroad in quantity. Gold, for example, has an unlimited market. In other metals and minerals we can hope for creased export as industrial conditions in other nations stabilize. I look for an expanding Susiness in the exports of lumber.

"I do not believe, however, that we can ob- incline to faith that this will not occur, t tain the sale abroad of commodities enough to that expansion in production of this vital need neet our annual balance of payments without of men will bring with it; as it has always done, not only a continuance but an increase in the a corresponding expansion in the world's production of our farma

It amounts roughly to 235 million bushels in Canada. I cannot believe that we shall succeed in reducing this by the end of the crop year at July 31, to much less than 160 million bushels. Reduced as this is in comparison with the figures of the past two years, it still remains very large compared with the carryover of earlier years. The immediate concern which I feel about wheat is with regard to the chances of sales in the near future.

"I disagree with those who suggest that it is improper for this country to attempt any measures to protect its wheat producers against fall of the price of their product to the lowest depths. Wheat is far too important in the economy of this country for us to accept moved the prospect of its price falling to the levels where its producers are beggared believe, however, that it is equally dangerous for us to believe that we can prevent the price ability to expand its agriculture would be an of wheat, as recorded by a great world market such as Liverpool, from reflecting even a temporary condition of over production, or that we can persuade buyers abroad to pay premiume larger than justified by superior quality for Canadian whear compared with wheat from other areas. The subject is one of overwhelming importance to this country, and to every citizen. It is to be hoped that our policy will be framed with full realization of this fact. IS STILL OPTIMISTIC

"I remain an optimist concerning when Authentic figures indicate that world wheat production has been absorbed into consumption in almost every recent year with the not able exception of 1928; that in 1934 world con sumption exceeded production by a large mar gin; that the chief importing nations, despite their steady increase in acreage since the low point of the years immediately following the war, have not as a whole done more than restore their ordinary pre-war acreage

"Several importing nations have already ebandoned attempts to increase acreage; and many signs point to the permanent removal of the United States and Russia from the wheat export field justifying Canada in believing that it will be able to hold the decrease in its acreage which has taken place since the war. subject to some abandonment of unsuitable

The subject is one far too complex for one man's opinion to be more than that. The world's growth in wealth and commerce has as far as I can see, had its origin in the steady expansion of the production of basic foodstuffs. of which wheat is the most important. The difficulties of a few years do not change my pinion on this point. In all recorded history the world has never known a long continued condition of over-production of breadstuffs.

We must, of course, n all our products. capitalize the ability of this country to producquality will count, and nature has given us the ability to maintain it. Further, we must be prepared, in those fields in which we propose t compete, to do so by sales abroad at current market prices. Such measures as the Empire Trade Agreements may shelter the sale of products to some extent. They can never be carried to the point where they greatly raise the cost of living in the United Kingdom Measures such as we are now employing may 'In the case of Canada, it is not necessary to be used to protect our farmers from too drastic eystem which cannot be supported by present volume of our primary production You in Toronto a city which, despite its That volume must be increased, and I know no method as wise as that of expansion of

Save $10,000.00 a Month For Prince Rupert

In round figures something like $10,000 a month is being sent out of Prince Rupert to the mail order houses, mostly for goods that could be purchased at home. And the tragedy is that most of the people who send away are people who want to make their dollars spread over as much ground as possible. They have not much to spend and they want to buy a lot with it. These people in many cases are paying more for their goods than if they bought them right in Prince Rupert.

The mail order houses are under tremendous expense in doing business. They have a system of doing business that is very expensive. The result is that the customer must pay for all this cost while the company makes a profit from the goods the customer buys.

The business of the Prince Rupert storekeeer is cut very fine. The profits are small. He is there all the time to give service. The goods may be inspected at the time they are bought and in many cases tried on. There is no risk such as is taken when ordering from a picture in a catalogue.

Many readers of the Daily News buy from mail order houses and they have a right to do so if they wish. It is perfectly legal. Possibly at some time in the past they have been stung by a local merchant and we know there have been unscrupulous people in business here. We also know that occasionally a mistake is made by a firm that is really trying to give good service at a reasonable price. Don't the mail order houses make plenty of mistakes?

GIVE PRINCE RUPERT A CHANCE

We suggest to these mail order shoppers that they give Prince Rupert a chance. Shop around a little. Go from place to place and find out the merchandise that suits and compare with what can be secured from the mail order houses. In many cases it will be found that goods can be purchased in this city for ten to fifteen percent less than is paid when shopping by catalogue and the risk is much less.

Everyone knows how deceiving pictures are. Often the goods shown in pictures would be passed over in the store as unworthy of notice. When put alongside the better quality goods their defects are so apparent that the shopper is ashamed to take them. They seem cheap in the picture and are really so cheap that they always look cheap and can be recognized as mail order product. You get exactly what you are paying for.

Now take the view of the civic patriot. He likes to see his city prosperous. He possibly owns his own home. He may have a family that needs employment. As long as he sends his money away, the city does not benefit. If he owns his home, its value drops because he fails to support his own home town. If his family needs employment, this cannot be secured because the money that would provide them jobs is sent away.

Let us think what would happen if the $10,000 a month now sent out of town were expended right here. The local merchant would do more business and could give even better values than at present. More Prince Rupert lads and lasses would be employed and everybody would be happier than at present. Builders and decorators would be working. Supply houses would be busy. The city would be as busy as if a new pulp mill were started.

We take it for granted that everyone hopes the paper mill will come to the city and thus increase its prosperity. If all citizens bought at home it would have about the same effect, so why not be prosperous, paper mill or no paper mill?

ROGERS IS

Outstanding Pictures and Players Famous George Ade Comedy, "The County Chairman," Affords Him Fine Role

> Will Rogers comes to the screen of the Capitol Theatre here this mid-week as a wily, lovable county boss, half diplomatic and half rustic, in "The County Chairman," another of his series of notable American character portraits. Adapted from George Ade's famous play of the same name, it is said to be a story of smiles and hearttugs and one of the finest efforts of Rogers' to date. He wins elections and arranges love matches with equal skill and no one, not even his rivals, can resist him. Once again Rogers displays his recently developed flair for singing. This time he renders an old time western ranger's song, accompanying himself on the guitar. Another highlight of "County Chairman" is a torchlight procession such as were so much in vogue at the turn of the century.

A notable supporting cast includes such players as Evelyn Venable, Kent Taylor, Louise Dresser, Berton Churchill, Mickey Rooney, Frank Melton and Stepin Fetchit.

Rev. W. R. Welch, United Church pastor at Terrace, and Mrs. Welch arrived in the city on the Prince June 26 and 27-John Boles and Rupert this morning from Vancouver, where they attended the recent British Columbia conference, and will proceed to the interior on this evening's train.
