"Even the Economic Council idea comes from Pattullo," said the Dormouse.

"Well, I watched it working out in B.C.," said the Hatter, with a sly smirk, "and it didn't seem to do any harm there. It didn't seem to do anything at all. So I thought there can be no harm in having one here. That is the kind of reform that I like."

"You see," said the Hatter, referring to the maunscript of a radio address which he had just delivered, "we could not pause to make repairs to the ship during the storm and fury of the depression, but now that we are in calmer waters, now that the ship has reached safe anchorage-"

"Now that an election is just around the corner," whispered the March Hare.

"We can," said the Hatter, "adopt those remedies which will endure to posterity and to the glory of our fair country.'
